For the Children

Misses West and Carhart at Tuxedo Horse Show.

At the horse show recently held at fashionable Tuxedo the members of the pony class attracted considerable attention. This class was made up of young folks who exhibited their favorite ponies and horses. Arrayed in the latest riding and driving habits, they presented a very smart, not to say sporty, appearance. Society's little folk are familiar with ponies from their infancy and as soon as they are able to sit in the saddle are taught to ride. They are also schooled in handling the reins and are altogether thoroughly versed in horse lore. The two little girls whose portraits are shown above are Misses J. Warner West and V. Carhart. They were exhibitors at the show.

An After Dinner Trick.

Tommy Brown, a little boy, tried this trick on some of his friends and was thought very clever. Just when dinner was nearly over Bridget quietly announced that the grocer must have forgotten to bring the nuts and raisins. The company were all more or less disappointed, but Tom, the host, seemed very angry at this omission. Impudently he said to Bridget, "Fetch me the dish in which the nuts and raisins should have been served." Pretending to be very much annoyed, he flourished his own napkin vigorously over the empty dish; then, carefully lifting the napkin, much to the surprise of all, the dish was revealed full of nuts and raisins.

This is how Tom managed the trick. He had got Bridget to sew two napkins together all around the edges and to slit one across the middle. The space between the napkins made a bag, into which Tom had supplied the nuts and raisins. He held the bag between his knees, with another napkin over his lap. While he was gesticulating in apparent disappointment, he had quickly changed napkins. The trick was a clever bit of homemade sleight of hand and all shouted at Tom's cleverness.

"Elephant Tag."

In playing the game called "elephant tag" each child takes the name of an animal—dog, cat, kangaroo, panther or anything he wishes, but one must be the elephant, and one must be the mouse. The elephant tries to catch all the animals except the mouse, and the mouse tries to catch the elephant. If the elephant touches one of the animals that animal must go into the menagerie (probably the front yard). He tries to get all the animals into the menagerie without getting caught by the mouse. If there are many children there can be two elephants and two mice. If one of the elephants is caught he is put into the menagerie, too, but he can be rescued if the other elephant touches him.

A "C" Game.

Each question can be answered by a word ending in "cy."
A stately C? Aristocracy.
A royal C? His excellency.
A deceptive C? Fallacy.
A criminal C? Piracy.
A much desired C? Currency.
A clever C? Policy.
An exclusive C? Privacy.
An aromatic C? Spicey.
A tempting C? Delicacy.
A mercurial C? Clemency.

An Intelligent Horse.

A story is being told of the intelligence of a horse belonging to a rustic Scotchman of Ardow, Mull. It lost a shoe and, managing to get out of the field where it was grazing, traveled a considerable distance to a blacksmith, who was astonished to find the horse standing in front of the door holding up a foreleg. The horse was shod and galloped back home quite contented.

Teddy and Miss Rainy Day.

When Teddy meets Miss Rainy Day He wears a rubber coat of gray. A drooping hat protects his head, A big umbrella's o'er him spread, And on the street he seems to be A blot of black and gray to me.

But if I peep beneath the rim Of his umbrella, black and grim, I find the loveliest surprise Of laughing lips and merry eyes. And I laugh back and quite forget The grayness and the rain and wet.

And 'tis the very selfsame way With what we call Miss Rainy Day. Behind her cloak of dismal clouds Gay little sunbeams lurk in crowds, And if you look for them you'll see How nice Miss Rainy Day can be.

—St. Nicholas.
