PADS AND FANCIES.

A wooden butter-knife made of holly-wood will be found a convenience in the kitchen.

Diced sweetbreads and celery in equal parts, tossed up with mayonnaise and served on hearts of lettuce make a delicious salad.

If the lamp chimneys are badly smoked and it seems impossible to wash them clean, try rubbing them over with a little alcohol.

When sewing I find my sewing machine drawer better than any waste basket. I open the top drawer, which I always keep empty, and into this put basting threads, ravelings and small bits of materials.

Candles, like soap, will last longer if allowed to ripen. It is well to keep a supply for six months or a year ahead if one would practice a true economy.

If a damp cloth is dipped in baking soda and used to wipe finger marks from paint, the paint will last longer than if soap is used.

Sand and Putty Colored Suits.

There has recently developed in New York a demand for suits in the new sand and putty colors. These colors can best be described as light tan, resembling the sand of the seashore and the grayish color of putty. Both are neutral colors, and despite the fact that they are light in tone they have been taken up by women of discrimination in the selection of their clothes.

The materials employed for these suits are gabardines, serges, broadcloths and velvets, frequently trimmed with one of the fashionable dark furs, such as skunk, Kolinsky and seal. Beaver is used, however, on some of the sand-colored suits. While covert cloth is not strictly sand color, it is meeting with considerable favor in this city.

Belts Very Popular.

Belts are being employed very largely on coats this season, but instead of the low waisted effects which were so prominent early in the fall many are now raised to the normal waistline and a few above, says the Dry Goods Economist.

Yoke effects are also noted on some models recently brought out, and a few coats in Empire effect have been taken, particularly in afternoon and evening wraps. These are mostly in pile fabrics, including corduroys, velveteens, velvet, plushes and broadtail cloth.

Neckwear Novelties.

According to the Dry Goods Economist, marine and fine net neckbands finished with rosette bows continue in favor, particularly in delicate flesh shades. These are worn clasped around the neck in conjunction with semi-tailored dresses.

Among other noteworthy novelties are collars mounted on net or lace fronts arranged in surplus fashion, so as to be adaptable for insertion in a dark street dress. In these types the collar portion is frequently shaped so that it can be worn in conjunction with a fur neckpiece.

Culinary Notes

Using Leftovers For Supper.

Supper is the meal at which the capable housekeeper may show her ability in using up leftovers. If she is clever she may provide appetizing surprises, which generally do not require much material or time, says the United States department of agriculture. It is mistaken economy to add a good deal of expensive materials in order to use up things of little value or to attempt fussy dishes that require long preparation. As far as everyday supper is concerned, it is usually good policy to avoid elaborate dishes and let the most of the time and strength expended for such things go to the main part of the day. This is especially true where the women of the family do all the work.

In many families supper includes one hot dish and a second course of preserves and cocoa. Here, as at breakfast, some kind of bread, with butter and a hot beverage, forms the basis of the meal, with an appetizing dish of eggs, meat, cheese or vegetables.

While noon dinner and supper are the rule in most rural districts and smaller communities, in other parts of the country, as every one knows, lunch and evening dinner take their place, as is inevitable where the wage earners must be away from home all day long. In such cases what has been said about supper applies to lunch. If some of the family carry their lunch away with them, bread and butter again form the usual basis of the meal, with cold meat, hard boiled eggs or some other appetizing as well as nutritious food and perhaps fruit and cake to complete and vary it.

Desserts Are an Economy.

When no dessert is provided a greater quantity of meat and vegetables must be eaten to satisfy the demands of nature. For some this is all right, but for the majority of people a certain amount of sugar and starch is necessary in the food. Children should not be deprived of this kind of food. It is economical to provide a dessert even if a simple one.

In arranging for a dinner, plan a light dessert when the rest of the meal is to be substantial. When the main part of the dinner is to be light let the dessert be hot and substantial.

For example, if the first part of the meal consists of cold meat and vegetables serve a hot apple pudding for dessert.

A good one can be made of a pint of flour, prepared as for cream of tartar biscuit, rolled thin and filled with pared and quartered apples, then steamed for two hours and served with molasses or sugar sauce.

Or the apples may be put into a stew-pan for a few minutes, covered with the biscuit dough and cooked for about twenty minutes longer.
 No sauce will be needed with this pudding.

Olive Oil in Cookery.

In the making of dark cakes, such as fruit, apple cake or gingerbread, and in puddings olive oil can be used instead of butter. In making cakes the olive oil and sugar are stirred to a cream as is the case when butter is used and the other ingredients added in the ordinary way.

For greasing baking tins or pudding dishes olive oil can be more economically used than butter, as the small amount needed can be poured from the bottle directly into the dish and then applied with a bit of tissue paper. Crust is not so liable to burn as when butter is used, and the flavor of the crust is much more delicious than when lard is adopted for this purpose.

Oiling the crust of bread or rolls just before taking from the oven gives an additional richness both of color and taste.

Substitute For Lard.

Pork trimmings will serve as a substitute for lard in frying. Those can be obtained from your butcher. The economy lies not so much in the price paid, for, of course, there is more oil in lard than in the same quantity of meat, but the food fried in it does not absorb so much fat, and in that way waste is eliminated. Then, too, the flavor is greatly improved. The "trimmings" give the food the flavor of ham without the disagreeable, fatty taste which so often accompanies food cooked in lard. Potatoes fried in it can be eaten with pleasure, and breads and other fried foods usually avoided can be enjoyed when prepared with bacon or pork trimmings.

That Underdone Joint.

If a joint of meat should be too underdone to eat and several slices have been carved out it can be cooked again and served up as a fresh joint if the hole is filled up with mashed potatoes and cooked in a brisk oven for an hour. The browned potatoes will be much appreciated, and that it is the second time of sending it to table will not be noticed.

When Serving Baked Potatoes.

A baked potato, sweet or white, should be broken open as soon as it is done or it becomes a bit soggy. Both have more flavor when warmed over than hot potatoes, but the steam should always be let out of them while they are hot.

NEW JUDGE WILL AID IN MAKING THE APPOINTMENTS

No Supervisor to Be Named or Policies to Be Determined Until Supreme Court Acts.—Many Changes May Be Made.

Commissioners Hawley and Harlow propose to exercise joint control over the more central and more important road districts and divide for individual attention which dual supervision would be difficult.

Such policies as the care of the poor and the handling of the county physician's work will also remain undecided until after the determination of the county judge controversy. The new court, as fully selected, will determine the policies.

"For my part," states Judge Thompson, referring to the recent budget committee, "I should never be in favor of adopting that very silly proposal that all the doctors be allowed to treat the poor patients as they see fit and have there were many good men on that committee of fifteen, but parts of those recommendations would not warrant adoption."

Commissioner Harlow states as a personal view, he would advocate that the county let the work in a system of bidding, allowing it to go to the physician who makes the lowest bid upon the whole work. He advocates a sort of flat rate for the medical care of the poor. The matter, however, has not come before the court for formal consideration, and will not until the judgeship is determined.

Those business men who appreciate having in the city a printing office that can do as classy work as can be done anywhere, have their printing done by The Sentinel.
