FADS AND FANCIES.

Household Hints.

If soot is accidentally spilled on the rug do not attempt to sweep it up immediately for the result is sure to cause a disfiguring mark. Cover it quickly and thickly with dry salt or corn meal. It can then be swept up without the slightest stain or evidence of smear.

A black leather shopping bag which was perfectly good except that it was getting gray and shabby, was painted with black colorite, which is used to color straw hats. The bag now looks as good as new. Colorite is cheap and can be had in any color.

When the drains from bath tubs or sinks become clogged, turn in a small quantity of water, and with an inverted pail (a five-pound hard pail) churn up and down over the opening. The suction effect is equal to that produced by plumbers' tools.

An old hammock, ready to be discarded, is excellent for training vines. Simply stretch the hammock where it is wanted and fasten it with stout nails. This eliminates all the work of constructing a network of string.

A piece of onion placed in the kettle when the chicken is stewing will add much to the flavor and the onion taste will not be noticed.

Brown slices of toast and scraps of bread in the oven, then roll and place in jars. When baking cookies three or four cups of the crumbs may be used.

White or light-colored ostrich plumes may be dyed at home by dipping them in gasoline in which enough oil paint from a tube of artist's pigment of the desired shade has been dissolved to give the color. A very small quantity of color will probably give the shade wanted, but it must be completely dissolved before the process is undertaken. Hold the feather by the stem and move it around in the liquid, until the color is evenly spread. Shake dry, and the feather will become quite fluffy.

Sometimes when sprinkling a thin waist or baby dress which needs to be ironed in a hurry it is difficult to distribute the dampness evenly. Dip a crash towel in water, wring it out thoroughly, place the waist or article to be ironed in it, and roll both up tightly. In twenty minutes the article is evenly dampened. This would not be the case if sprinkled in the ordinary way.

Use of Land Plaster.
Legume crops are benefited by application of land plaster when growing on soils rich in potash and phosphoric acid, such as the heavier silt loams of Western Oregon. Land plaster can in no way be regarded as a fertilizer, aside from the possibilities of sulphur from the calcium sulphate, but is a soil stimulant instead, according to the agronomy department of the Oregon Agricultural College. Its use is justified only with legume crops, clover, vetch, alfalfa, etc., which in return for the loss of potash and phosphoric acid returns increased amounts of nitrogen, a more expensive fertilizer and a more valuable plant food. It is thus a legitimate practice to enrich the soils with nitrogen at the expense of the potash and phosphoric acid on all soils rich in the two latter plant foods. With crops other than legumes it can hardly be considered a desirable practice to use land plaster as a stimulant, since it causes a rapid loss of soil fertility without making any return to balance the fertility condition. Neither does land plaster usually have a sufficiently marked effect to make its use on cereals and grasses profitable.

Definite and accurate information regarding the climate, resources, products and advantages of Oregon has been made available to all sections of the United States by the presentation, by the Portland Chamber of Commerce, of copies of the Oregon Almanac.

Department of all railroads and the resulting correspondence indicates that they will have a marked effect upon the volume of tourist travel in this direction this year.

"WHO COMES HERE?"

By M. QUAD
Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate

"Halt! Who comes here?"
"Friends, with the countersign."
"Advance one and give the countersign."

It was the relief going the rounds to change the pickets, and I was dropped out at post No. 7. We had fought Lee all day long on the strangest battlefield of the whole war—in the Wilderness. From right to left flank, from front to rear, we were hemmed in by forest and thicket. There were swamps in which lizards and serpents lurked, thickets in which the coy whippoorwill built its nest, dense spots of forest which seemed never to have echoed the ring of the woodman's ax.

Post No. 7 was under a large tree on the edge of a thicket. It was a lonely place, well away from the camps, the dead and the dying, but I was glad to be alone. I had been nearly an hour on the post without anything happening to alarm me, when I heard a person moving in the thicket across the open strip.

Rustle, rustle! Step, step! It was a cautious movement. Whoever it was hoped to reach me without discovery, but there were dead leaves underfoot, and the thicket was dense. A hare could not have moved without betraying its presence.

"Who comes here?"
There is silence for fifteen seconds, and then a woman's voice answers: "I can't find the place! It's so dark I can't find the place!"

Aye, it was a woman's voice, and it had a sob in it, too—a woman there in the darkness between the hostile lines with powder smoke still in the air, with stray bullets darting through the thickets with a whiz as of some great insect stirred to anger.

"Who comes here?"
"I wish it wasn't so dark! I am so tired!"

And then she comes across the open strip toward me, making no stop, never hesitating, walking straight up to me, as if she could see as well by night as in the sunshine of day.

"I can't find the place!" she sobbed as she came to a stop within arm's length.
"Good God, woman, what are you doing here?" I gasped, almost terrified at her presence.

"See! See!" she replied, holding a bundle out toward me. "One time I saw a beautiful spot in the woods and said to myself that if he died I would bury him there, but I can't find it—I can't find it!"

"What is it, woman? What have you got there?"
"See! See! Don't be afraid. He's dead. He can't speak or move. Take him!"

She put a bundle into my arms, and I cried out and let my musket fall. It was the body of a baby about a year and a half old. Dead? Yes—dead from a cruel bullet which had pierced its little body and left a great wound, which looked horrible to me in the dim light; dead and cold and bathed in its own blood—dead for hours! And when I reached out and touched the shawl or wrap worn by the mother my fingers burned at the feel of blood!

"Was it your baby? Did you live in the cabin beyond the thicket?" I asked, still holding the little corpse.
"He was so happy!" she said as she patted the little bare head with a motherly hand. "And I was so happy too! He won't ever laugh and crow again, will he? I've got to find that beautiful place and bury him, haven't I? And you'll help me? Yes; I know you will, for you don't swear and curse at me."

She had lost her mind. Think of it—an insane mother wandering over a bloody battlefield with her dead child in her arms! She had but one idea—to bury it in a dell which she had once visited and remarked its beauty, a dell in which Federal and Confederate were doubtless then burying their own dead.

I knew not what to do. I could not leave my post, and I did not want her to go wandering farther. I was trying to soothe and quiet the woman when she suddenly cried out:
"Ah, it's not so dark now, and I can find the place! I'll go on ahead and dig the grave, and you follow on with the baby. Poor baby! He won't know that he is buried, will he? I can find the place, and you—"

"Come back! Come back!" I called to her as she fled away in the darkness, but she was 200 feet away as she answered me:
"I'll find the place! Poor, poor baby!"

And when the relief came I told the story and pointed to the bundle resting on the ground beside me.
"God pity her!" whispered the sergeant as he lifted his cap.

"God pity her!" echoed all the others as they stood uncovered around the poor little corpse.
Time meant human lives that night. Grant was moving by the flank. Lee was moving by the flank to match him. The morrow was to witness more slaughter—make thousands of other widows and orphans.

"Dig here!" said the sergeant, and with our bayonets we scooped out a shallow grave in scarcely more than a minute's time.
"Carefully now! Poor little thing! Now fill in. That will do. God knows where it lies! Fall in! Forward, march!"

And yet men write of the glory of war!

have been built by none other than a great government," the senator said, "but it would not have been built by the United States except as a military necessity. The trip of the battleship Oregon around Cape Horn while the people trembled for fear New York harbor was to be attacked, showed the canal to be a military necessity and consequently it was built."

state. The two men had not met before, however.

And it was ideal weather every day—not a drop of rain and not too hot.

Those who had declared in advance that Senator Burkett was a broken down politician haven't been making much noise since the senator captured the chautauqua audiences.

The only disappointment on the entire program was the Jubilee Singers. They were advertised as the Buckner company, but were not in the class with the Buckner company that was here last year, of which Mr. and Mrs. Buckner were members.

Marietta La Dell proved herself a wonderful impersonator and her child imitations were one of the features of the session. When the Jubilee Singers were detained and missed one program, Miss La Dell filled in the vacancy with satisfaction to the audience.

Arthur A. Franke's lecture on "The Matchless Book," being a history of the Bible, was an address full of deep thought and showing considerable study in its preparation. From an oratorical standpoint his addresses were probably the best of the session.

Miss Charlotte Bergh, who didn't look much bigger than a half minute, charmed several audiences with her pretty soprano voice.

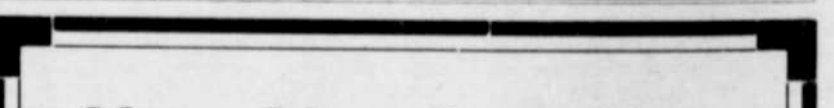

Of the musical numbers, Witpekie's Hungarian Orchestra was given first place by a large majority. The appreciation of the musical harmonies was evidenced by the enthusiasm with which the organization, particularly its able leader, were received. Everyone who attended the sessions wishes this organization to return next year.

Miss Margaret Miller, junior superintendent, leaves many friends behind, especially among the young ones whom she entertained for the week.

Senator Burkett easily received a majority of votes for first place.
