

TAKING ADVANTAGE OF ADVERTISING THAT COSTS MERCHANT NOTHING

E. B. Moon, a storekeeper in Lakeville, Ind., is big enough man to be called to Chicago to talk before the Advertising association. And it's little wonder the association wanted him, for he is a successful storekeeper.

In the address mentioned, Mr. Moon said the country merchant would do well to watch the advertising campaigns carried on by the manufacturers and wholesale houses, then use his local paper to tell the people in that community that his place of business was the only one where they would find the articles being advertised in the larger papers and magazines.

Either manufacturers or wholesalers will be glad to keep the retailer posted on what they are doing, or propose doing in an advertising way, if he will ask for the information. Assume, then, that the local business man knows the manufacturer of some article he handles is going to launch a new campaign through the farm papers, household magazines, etc. Many of these publications will enter almost every local merchant's territory. Let him use his local paper, speaking of the big campaign being carried on, and telling his community that his store is the one in that town handling that article. If the merchant be progressive enough, he always can find an advertising campaign carried on to increase the sales of some article or many articles that he sells. It may be hardware, a certain shoe, a certain cigar, a brand of tobacco, a make of clothes, or what not?

O. A. C. Band Makes Hit

A very large and enthusiastic audience greeted the Corvallis High School band in the high school auditorium Friday evening. This band has been organized only two years and a half and A. E. Moses, the director, has had them under him almost the entire time. Under his able tuition they have become an organization for Corvallis to be proud of. The band numbers that were deserving of special mention were the short selections from "William Tell" and "Tannhauser," which were in a medley overture, and the humorous on "What's the Matter With Father?"

The only vocal number on the program was by Mr. Tully and was much appreciated by the audience. He responded to an encore.

"U Know Me" cartoonist made quite a hit with some very clever and comical pictures drawn in rapid fashion. The cornet solo by Mr. Moses, the director, was specially good, showing very clean and even technique and good range on his instrument. Probably quite a few of the spectators were fooled by Mr. Knight's reading of "Auntie, on Modern Style." His voice sounded very much feminine and the deception was clever.

The boys gave a splendid concert and it was also a success financially. This tour for the band was arranged by Mr. Moses between semesters for the purpose of giving the boys an outing, or sort of reward for their diligent study and also for some practical experience.

CLOUD FORMATIONS.

Why the Masses of Moisture Are Able to Float in the Air.

Clouds consist of particles of condensed water vapor and in some cases of extremely fine spicules of ice, which is also formed from water vapor. Water vapor which arises by evaporation from the surface of seas, lakes, etc., is lighter than dry air at the same temperature and pressure. It is also invisible.

It disseminates itself through the atmosphere and ascends to great heights. There, owing to the fall of temperatures and to other causes, it begins to condense into particles which are slightly heavier than air and which become visible clouds.

Owing to the influence of winds and of rising currents as well as to the fact that the condensed particles are nearly as light as air the clouds remain floating, like fine suspended matter in water, until further condensation creates particles of sufficient size to form raindrops, whose relative great weight brings them rapidly to the ground.

That clouds do slowly descend even when not condensed into rain may be observed when they are seen to dissolve and disappear without apparent cause. This is caused by the cloud's descent to a level where a rise of temperature causes the condensed water vapor to revitalize, thus becoming again invisible.—New York Journal.

MOST ANCIENT TREATY.

Carved in Stone on the Walls of Two Egyptian Temples.

On the walls of two of Egypt's greatest temples, that of Karnak and the Ramesseum at Thebes, carved in the everlasting stone of the dry land of the Nile, says the Christian Herald, is the oldest international treaty known to man. Rameses the Great, one of the signers, is the best known man of remote antiquity. Khetasar (the czar of the Kheta or Hittites), the other party to the treaty, is unknown except to a few, and his nation is little known even to the scholars.

The Hittites were a mighty race, whose empire, equal in rank with the mighty empire of Egypt and Babylonia, once extended over 400,000 square miles of territory in Asia Minor and Syria. A few years ago practically nothing was known of the life and civilization of these mysterious people.

They are mentioned in the Bible and in the Egyptian and Assyrian records, but until very recently their own story had never been read by modern man. Today, thanks to the excavations that were carried on at the capital city of Carchemish, much has been learned about this great group of tribes, and orderly evidence about them is now available for the first time in 2,900 years.

Scientist Who Couldn't Light a Fire.

Lord Kelvin, like Lord Morley, once amused a Scottish audience with a display of ignorance. At a lecture in Edinburgh, with Lord Kelvin in the chair, the Duke of Argyll was taken suddenly ill. "When the aged peer was carried down to one of the ante-rooms," said a local paper, "one of the first things to be thought of was the lighting of a fire, and this task was tackled by the duke's host, Lord Kelvin. But instead of placing some paper in the grate and some wood on that in the orthodox manner, he amazed the on-lookers by desperate efforts to kindle a handful of sticks at a gas burner. Ordinary mortals may be pardoned for taking some satisfaction in the fact that even so great a philosopher as Lord Kelvin did not know how to light a fire."

Oddest of Queer Fishes.

A queer fish that does not swim is the "sargasso fish," known to sailors as the "frogfish." It lives in that vast mass of floating gulfweed called the Sargasso sea, in mid-Atlantic.

Its pectoral fins are so modified and developed as to resemble arms, and it uses them for clinging to the weed. Very gaudily colored, it changes its hues to match the aquatic vegetation by which it is surrounded, and when the latter decays and turns brown it assumes a corresponding shade.

The fish lays its eggs in a jelly-like mass, which, absorbing a great quantity of water, becomes three times as big as the mother fish herself, assuming the form of a narrow raft three or four feet long and two to four inches wide.

Looking Back.

"This car of yours seems to give you great pleasure."

"Yes. I often wonder how I ever got along without it," answered the motorist loftily. "Walking tires me dreadfully and is—er—somewhat plebeian."

"Pardon me for reminding you of the painful past, but I happen to know that you used to cover considerable territory as a mere pedestrian."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

After the Wedding.

"Your pa promised to give a dowry of 20,000 marks. When is he going to pay?"

"Well, if he promised 20,000 marks he meant 2,000, and you ought not to insist on such a trifling sum!"—Meggendorfer Blaetter.

McSwine's Gun.

McSwine's gun is a prodigious cavity in the cliffs on the coast of County Donegal, Ireland, into which the tide rushes with such force as to produce a sound like the booming of a cannon, which can be heard twenty or thirty miles away.
