"You" and "Jim"

(Mike Kinney in Brush, Colo., Tribune)
Only a storekeeper—that's all.
Down the street—yes, in your own town.

Plain sort of a fellow, him—not much of a merchant, no. Decent chap though, and honest.

When you drop into his store, it's like him—plain.

He calls you "Bill" and you call him "Jim"; home folks, you know.

He asks you how the children are, and wife; he knows them, too.

He shows you what you want to buy, tells you if it's good or bad—and names the price.

"Just charge it, Jim," you say; "I'm a little short right now."

"All right, Bill," he says, and wraps it up.

He pays his taxes here; he chips in all he can to help along the fire department, the schools and the churches.

He sits in lodge with you; he calls around when you're sick.

He hires home folks to clerk and to keep his books; he buys his groceries, meat, clothes, etc., at home of neighbor merchants.

"Tisn't much, but what it is, your town gets all the benefit.

Your bill comes due and still you're short of ready cash. "I'll have to stand you off a while, Jim," you say.

"All right, Bill," he says; "I know you'll pay me when you can," and neither growls nor grumbles.

Pretty decent sort of a chap, isn't he? You know it!

But what about the catalog you keep at home and study nights and Sundays?

You read the sidishow line of talk about the stuff it lists.

Yes, and when you have the coin, maybe you make an order for some things you've got to have and with the order send the dough; you buy sight unseen.

In time the shipment comes—you'd hate to have Jim know. "Course it's none of his business, but then, he might feel hurt because you hadn't paid him what you owe.

Somehow the plunder that you get don't seem so wonderful as the story of it read; in fact it isn't what you thought it was.

And if you're stung, as others often are, you don't put up a holler and ask your money back. Nary!

You read the line of talk again, and find the chap who wrote it was a darn sight smoother than you thought; he worded his description with such clever skill that you yourself filled in his artful gaps; and, now you're stung, you'd a leetle rather no one'd find it out.

But Jim—Oh, that's another matter, quite. If accidentally you happen to quote, or warm, before you chop, the axe you bought of him, and bust a clean cut semicircle from its edge; or if the cook stove Mandy bought of Jim don't somehow suit her notion "bout the way it bakes or draws; or if the barrel churn he sold you shacks because the girls forgot to keep a little water in it.

Why, you go right back to Jim and if he doesn't hustle around and smile and hand you out another axe, no charge, or send a man to see the stove and clean out your soot-clogged chimney, or tighten up your churn—by thunder, you cut loose and rip him up the back and down again—

THAT'S DIFFERENT.
Yep!

Poor old Jim!
Only a storekeeper—that's all.

"HE can't compete with mail order folks," you say; "HE don't know how to buy; HE hasn't the outlet; HIS prices are too high."

Listen!
If he can't compete, the fault is as much yours as his.

You measure by a double standard. You finger over his stock, you blow your breath on his razor blades, you get his guarantee and then you stand him off and let him sweat until you're good and ready to pay—while to the strangers who neither know you nor care a tinker's cuss about you, you must pay before you see or get the goods.

You make Jim earn the slender profit he makes on you; you make him feel your banker when you're short of funds; you squeeze poor Jim and Jew him down and strain the truth to beat the band; you strew his path with thorns and rocks.

And if your neighbors do like you and send away their ready cash to swell the sales of those who never help your town or you, some day, not very far away, poor Jim will reach the point where he can't longer hold the bag; and when he closes up or moves away, there's one more vacant business room in town.

And real estate is on the bum—your town grows backwards; somehow taxes keep climbing up, but stores are fewer, business worse each year. The schools are getting punk—you've got to send your children to the city for a decent education—and for that you must pay cash.

Why?
Think it over.

Farm and Garden

FOR BETTER FARMING.

Value of the Gas Engine and Tractor on the Farm.

A large percentage of farms today have gas engines to work for them pumping, sawing, grinding, etc.—in fact, nearly every farmer has an engine available for power work. If he does not own one his neighbor usually has one he can borrow for a few days to help out. In a very few years the small tractor will have become as common. Every man with 100 acres or more to plow each year must keep at least five horses to do the work. The small tractor that will pull a gang plow is gaining in popularity very rapidly. Not only can the tractor plow, disk, pull the drill and harrow, but grind feed, saw wood and fill the silo as well.

In buying a tractor be sure that it will pull a gang plow. If it will do this, turning a furrow six inches deep, it should develop fifteen horsepower and should handle a fourteen inch silage cutter with ease. With the tractor to lift the burden of plowing off the horses a way is open for better farming. The plowing can be done at the right season, no matter what the temperature is or how dry the ground is. The plow can also be set to a good depth. Nearly all team work is done on some successful farms with the light tractor, allowing the owners to dispose of nearly all their horses and cutting down on the feed bill. A great many people have enough horses laying around eleven months in the year eating their heads off which, if sold would bring enough money to buy a tractor to do the heavy team work and while idle would not depreciate in value.

Treating Seed Potatoes.

Treating seed potatoes with a disinfecting solution to prevent scab and other fungous diseases is but little trouble, and the expense is small. An hour's time and a half dollar expended for the purpose will often add $25 to $50 to the value of the crop from an acre of potatoes.

Control of Wireworms.

Wireworms injure corn and potatoes most, but feed freely on wheat and oats. They thrive best in sod ground and may be controlled by crop rotation, fall plowing and good cultivation. So may the grubworms.

TIMELY POULTRY WISDOM.

Chicks brought out in June, quartered in partly shady runs and kept free from lice, will make rapid growth.

During the heated term corn and all other heat producing foods should either be done away with entirely or fed in very moderate quantities, say about one-fourth the quantity give in winter.

Bugs and insects are plentiful, and the grass is tender. If the growing stock can have free range now they will consume a lot of the most desirable diet. With an evening feed of grain the poultry will be having an ideal ration.

A successful poultry plant is built up by a close observance of the small details. These minor matters in themselves may not have so great a bearing, but eventually by their neglect we soon learn of disaster.

During hot weather there is one item of food that must not be neglected, especially with yarded stock—green food. Green food will keep the bowels in good condition and purify the blood. Note the bright, healthy look of stock, both old and young, that have access to a grassy range. While we think that a range is the proper caper for growing strong, hardy stock, we do not approve of an unlimited range for breeders. They do better in large runs provided with every necessary.

The warm rains of June are not hurtful to the stock if caught in them, excepting to quite young chicks that still have their down. While a chicken's feathers are not of the oily nature of those of a duck, they still resist a certain amount of rain, and when that limit is reached they will at once seek shelter.

SILK CREEK.

Roy Wheeler acted as best man and Miss Vesta Kruse was maid of honor. Little Elsie and Genevieve Gildersleeve were flower girls and scattered flowers up the main aisle of the church ahead of the bridal party and upon the rostrum where the ceremony was performed. The bride was gownned in white. Mrs. Alice Gildersleeve played Mendelssohn's wedding march. About two hundred guests witnessed the ceremony.

A reception was given at the home of Mrs. Jennie Walker for the bridal party and relatives. The happy couple received many useful and beautiful presents.

Miss Elsie Elliwel arrived the last of the week from Ferdinand, Ida., and will attend school at the academy, which opens September 6.

Ellsworth Woods came down from the mines the last of the week to visit his parents.
