Impatience for Quick Results

is the bane of nine-tenths of those who fail in business. They expect advertising to bring them immediate and unprecedented prosperity right off the bat. They haven't the patience to conduct the persistent daily or weekly follow-up campaign that brings sure and certain results. It is unreasonable to advertise by jerks and spurts, expecting to get by such methods the results that the experienced advertiser gets by his continual hammering away in every issue of the paper. Advertising pays big dividends, but it must be the persistent, judicious kind.
