BUSINESS IS BETTER IN EVERY COUNTY IN OREGON

Net Returns to Producers Are Higher Than Last Year.

A sound basis for prosperous times in Oregon in the coming fall and winter is disclosed in a mass of reports just received by William Young, manager of the Portland office of R. G. Dun & company, in response to inquiries sent to every bank in the state and to a large number of important mercantile firms.

They were asked for brief reports as to the size of the leading crops, compared with last year, the percentage of gain or loss in lumber output, the increase or decrease in net returns to producers and a summary of present business conditions and prospects.

From these reports it is found that the income of the producing sections has been largely increased by the large crops and excellent prices and future business prospects are regarded as bright.

In a summary of the reports by counties the following is said of Lane county:

Lane—Grain crops increased 10 to 50 per cent and fruit crops varied, according to section, from 30 per cent decrease to 50 per cent increase. Lumber output averaged 20 per cent larger except in coast districts. Returns to producers ranged from 5 per cent decrease to 30 per cent increase. Business conditions are fair to good and prospects encouraging.

HOME FIRM SELLS 15 SILOS IN SEASON

More Than One Thousand Dollars Goes to Pay Wages of Home Labor.

Wooden Silo Is Much Cheaper Than Other Makes, Gives the Same Satisfaction and Keeps the Home Dollar at Home.

farmer stocking up to the limit of his pasturage capacity may run into a drought or pasture shortage that may mean a sacrifice of many partly ready cattle owing to inability to carry them over. Then the constantly increasing prices of hay and grain feed make it increasingly difficult to show a profit on beef cattle and doubly so on dairy cattle, owing to the falling off in milk production on a dry ration, or over winter when pastures run short. Further, the labor item increases with the feeding of shocked fodder to an increased herd.

The silo, through solving the minor problems that arise, is the most effective agency for solving the big problem of getting more cattle on the land. Corn for silage takes less ton per ton from the fertility of the soil than hay roughages. At the same time eight to ten tons of silage can be grown on an acre of land that will produce two tons of hay, it being estimated that a ton of silage is equal to half a ton of hay in feeding value. Silage will support two to three head of cattle on land that will support one without a silo. Instances are on record where 36 head of cattle have been successfully cared for on a 32-acre farm with silage as a basis of ration. Silage permits the use of pasture land for more profitable purposes. Silage eliminates the uncertainty of pasture feeding. A farmer can figure to a certainty how many cattle his silo will feed and no pasture shortage can disturb his calculations. Silage will increase milk profits by increasing production and insuring more uniform production. Silage will increase beef profits by attaining the same end as hay and grain feeding, with a saving of these more expensive feeds. Silage, by concentrating in one convenient spot a whole season's supply of feed, lessens feeding labor by requiring the handling of less hay per head and going to the field for shocked fodder. Silage takes less from the land and makes possible the return of more to the land.

The farmer who looks ahead is the farmer with a silo and cattle. He not only enjoys a greater present return on his foresight but is going to have a better farm in years to come than his silo-less, cattle-less neighbor.
