Eugene Man's Invention Duplicated.

Captain G. A. Sachs, of Eugene, says that the drawings of a recent invention of his have either been stolen or some Hollander's ideas are exactly like his. He recently received a patent from the United States for a rifle periscope, to be used by soldiers in the trenches. It is designed so that the soldier may sight his rifle with the periscope without showing his head above the ground.

Captain Sachs says he offered the invention to the German government at the beginning of the war and later offered it to the United States government, but the latter replied that it was not needed at present. The patent was not made public, being kept secretly in the archives of the patent office, says Captain Sachs.

The captain was surprised to see a picture of his invention in a Portland paper recently, crediting it to J. H. Eradus, a Dutch inventor, and labeled the "Eradus" rifle periscope.

LITTLE MISS HAS A VIVID IMAGINATION

Cottage Grove Schoolgirl Writes of Day When Folks Will Talk of War as Something Long Forgotten

A rather remarkable story has been written in the course of her regular school work by Marian Hess, who is 15 years of age and a member of the sophomore class. She has a vivid imagination which leads to a point which shows that she also has considerable common sense. Many will wish that this "fairly story" might come true. The story follows in the exact language and punctuation used by its author:

THE LAST WAR.

(Written in 2000 A. D.)

"Well, children, I have to tell you a story, have I? Now, you know I am a hundred and two years old and that's older than most folks live to be, so I remember lots of things that happened before the greater part of the people alive today were born.

"I was living in Alberta when the great war broke out. It came very suddenly. The first thing we read was that an Austrian Duke was killed by a Serbian and then that nearly every nation in Europe had declared war on some other nation. Germany, Austria and Turkey were on one side; and England, France, Russia, and a number of others were on the other. The next thing we knew men were enlisting right and left. Canada belonged to England in those days so the Canadians tried to help the English out all they could.

"Well, they fought and fought. I don't wonder that you can't understand it. I couldn't even then. Both sides lost men by the millions and neither made any material gain.

"Most of the poor men had to fight whether they wanted to or not. Even England passed a conscription bill soon after the war started.

"It was the day before Christmas one year after the war had been raging for some time. The officers and men all along the lines of trenches got a pen among them. They said: 'We will send a wireless message to the Germans, telling them we will not fire a shot tomorrow if they won't.'

"The message was sent and the reply came that no fighting should be done on Christmas day.

"The next day the men met between the trenches and enjoyed the first spell of friendliness they had had in months. Everyone asked everyone else, 'What are we fighting about?'

"'Nothing. Let's go on a strike!'

"It was agreed on then and there. Up and down the miles of trenches the watchword went like wildfire. 'We won't fight any more.' Scarcely a man dissented.

"Who wants war?' they shouted. 'We don't.'

"Who wants war?'

"The Kings!'

"Well, the long and short of it was, they gathered up all the royal families of the nations at war, took them down to an island off the coast of Africa, and turned them loose to fight it out among themselves.

"Quite to the surprise of the soldiers they showed no inclination to fight or even quarrel. The royal families were all related to each other, and it was just like a family reunion. The Queen of Italy embraced the King of Germany, her father, who had been his enemy in the war.

"A couple of warships hung around for a while to see that the prisoners did not escape, but they did not attempt to do so, so the guards took off all the accoutrements of war from one of the ships and turned it over to them, so that they might get necessities from the mainland. Then the guards sailed back to their homes.

"Of course the Kings and Queens, and Princes had to go to work to make a living, and they may be there yet for all I know.

"In the meantime the nations back in Europe had set up republics, and bound themselves together to prevent a recurrence of war. There hasn't been a war since and I hope there never will be."
