THURSDAY, JULY 26, 1917

'Tis the star-spangled banner,
Oh! long may it wave
O'er the land of the free
And the home of the brave.

THE LAST LEAF.

I saw him once before
As he passed by the door,
And once again
The pavement stones resound,
As he totters o'er the ground
With his cane.

They say that in his prime,
Ere the pruning-knife of Time
Cut him down,
Not a better man was found
By the crier on his round
Through the town.

But now he walks the streets,
And he looks at all he meets
Sad and wan;
And he shakes his feeble head,
That it seems as if he said,
"They are gone."

The mossy marbles rest
On the lips that he has pressed
In their bloom;
And the names he loved to hear
Have been carved for many a year
On the tomb.

My grandmamma has said—
Four old lady she is dead
Long ago—
That he had a Roman nose,
And his cheek was like a rose
In the snow.

But now his nose is thin,
And it rests upon his chin
Like a staff;
And a crook is in his back,
And a melancholy crack
In his laugh.

I know it is a sin
For me to sit and grin
At him here;
But the old three-cornered hat,
And the breeches, and all that,
Are so queer!

And if I should live to be
The last leaf upon the tree
In the spring,
Let them smile, as I do now,
At the old forsaken bough
Where I cling.
—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

PENDLETON DIDN'T BUCK.

The newspapers of Oregon have many times during the past few years gone on record against free advertising, and it takes a mighty smooth press agent to put anything over on the leading country newspapers of Oregon. But Pendleton, she of the round-up, has put one over on the newspaper boys—and the boys are glad she did.

Pendleton invited the whole editorial association over there for the 1917 convention, filled the boys with Pendleton pep—and other things—and made every one a volunteer and willing press agent for the biggest of all little cities.

We do not doubt for a moment but that Pendleton expected to get a whole lot of advertising as a result of entertaining the editors, but there is some doubt in the minds of the editors as to whether that advertising was free. The Pendleton people raised $2500 for the entertainment of the editors. They fed the boys on chicken, ice cream, salads and the many other things to which they are accustomed at home, entertained them in many ways and turned the city over to them. Anything the editors asked for they got and the whole city acted as a committee to make the editors feel that they owned the city and all its resources.

Every editor went home filled with the Pendleton spirit and down in his heart was a desire to inculcate his own city with some of the same stuff.

If every city in Oregon had Pendleton's style, we would be the greatest state in the union. If Portland had the Pendleton pep, it would be a city the size of Seattle and San Francisco combined.

And talking about the Pendleton spirit.

The Pendleton people paid the expenses of a special train to take the editors to Joseph, Wallowa lake and La Grande. Are there any cities in the Willamette valley that would spend money sending visitors to other cities? Joseph and La Grande seem to have taken on some of the Pendleton pep and they, too, did everything possible to make the visit of the editors enjoyable. Pleasing features were the open air breakfast and the fried trout dinner at the head of Lake Wallowa, a liquid sapphire in a setting of nature's rarest.

"Let 'er buck," is almost a synonym for "Pendleton," but she didn't buck a buck. She is the metropolis of eastern Oregon and did things up in a style that would make even Portland go some.

Incidentally it may be said that the editorial sessions were the most successful in the history of the association. They took the form of a kind of a post graduate course for the newspaper boys and much of value was taken home by the large number attending.

The veteran secretary, Phil Bates, has seen a most wonderful development in the association. Each of his presidents has done a little better than the one before. Brodie, who went out this year, set a hard pace for his successor, Voorhies, to follow, but the latter is equal to the job and will make good.

Hurrah for Pendleton, the Pendleton pep, the Pendleton spirit and Pendleton fried chicken!

Coots Bay has got to go some next year.

OFFICE MAY SEEK THE MAN.

The Heppner Herald this week suggests E. E. Brodie, ex-president of the Oregon State Editorial association, for secretary of state. Entirely without suggestion on his part, this proposed candidacy was the subject of considerable discussion among the newspaper boys at the recent editorial association, and it was the opinion of all those who made any comment that no better man could be picked for the job.

The editor of The Sentinel has been in a position to become pretty well acquainted with Brodie and his work and can say, without reservation, that he is in every way fitted for the job.

Brodie has made a success of a large business of his own and as president of the editorial association made a success of the business of others. He has a superabundance of energy to go with the other necessary qualifications.

The Sentinel understands that the present secretary of state is constitutionally ineligible for another term. This, then, is the psychological moment to bring forward a man like Brodie, who will maintain the splendid precedents of the office.

WHAT MIGHT BE.

A pleasing feature of the recent convention of the state editorial association was the presence of Edgar B. Piper and B. F. Irvine, editors of Portland's two biggest dailies. Formerly the Portland editors did not mix with the up-state boys. Possibly they thought the time would be wasted. Possibly they thought they would not be welcomed. Mr. Irvine was a regular attendant in the old days when he was a country newspaper man himself, but when he got into the daily field he dropped out. Now he says he'll not miss another meeting.

The Portland editors have not only found that they are welcome, but they have learned much from sitting alongside the country boys in convention—and the state is going to profit from a fuller understanding and working cooperation between the metropolitan and the country press.

We have known Piper for some time. We have known his caliber and have profited from and have enjoyed his friendship—but Irvine is a new acquaintance and a complete surprise.

Though blind, he sees more than many with two good eyes. He is kindly, a scholar, a gentleman, a man with a heart, a conscience, a wonderful command of the most beautiful English, and a prodigious appetite for fried chicken.

The mystery is how he ever became associated with C. S. Jackson, whose policies he must support and espouse. Jackson is Irvine's antithesis—and a most pronounced one. With good eyesight, he has no foresight; he is a rough-and-tumble dock-walloper, any scholarly attainments he may have being subordinated to a disposition of the thug and burglar; his English is noted more for volume than beauty, and blood and gore alone satisfy his cannibalistic appetite. He is happy only when ranting around like a wild bull tearing something to pieces.

What a different paper The Journal might be—what a different standing it might have throughout the state—if Irvine had a free rein!

The spirit which predominates in eastern and central Oregon is well illustrated in a special livestock edition of the Prineville Journal. It is replete with photos and filled with mighty interesting reading concerning one of the most interesting sections of God's green footstool.

It isn't the command of the "Keep Out" sign that keeps you out of a place—it's the fact that it informs you that you will not be welcomed inside. No one invites treatment as a buttinsky.
