Gasoline

Gasoline is a common product. Do you know that one gallon of gasoline, vaporized, has the tearing power of 33 pounds of dynamite?

Do you know that gasoline reaches its boiling point at 150 degrees Fahrenheit?

Do you know that gasoline is a non-conductor of electricity? It has, however, been known to generate enough heat by friction, when run through a fabric strainer or rubber hose to explode.

Five gallons of gasoline will generate 8000 cubic feet of gas.

In an incendiary fire in Portland, Oregon, five gallons of gasoline was poured on the floor and left two hours. When the fire broke out, it was a match.

The explosion tore the roof off of the house, tore the front porch off, blew the curtains and window shades 100 feet from the house, and incidentally, among the other debris, blew the fire-bomb against an apple tree 25 feet from the house.

A friend of ours went out to look for a leak in his auto gasoline tank with a lighted cigar in his mouth. His family mourn his loss.

A lady tried to clean a silk waist by pouring over it a cup of gasoline and rubbing the material between her hands—and the doctors say they will be able to tell in a few months whether she will ever be able to move her fingers.

Gasoline is a colorless liquid, highly inflammable—a petroleum product. That is a definition, gasoline could be defined as a petroleum product more powerful than dynamite, as sure to explode as nitroglycerin, as deadly as cyanide of potassium and as innocent looking as water; to be stored underground and used in the open air; never roof-proof or danger-free.

A moment's attention may save an hour's fire fighting.

A word of warning may save a life, a home, a business or a family.

Attention means prevention.
