ODFW

says Derek Broman, ODFW furbearer program coordinator. "For example, muskrats are a good indicator species for wetland health, and furtakers are very in tune with how this species is doing in Oregon."

"Furtaker reports also give us a sense on whether non-native invasive species populations like nutria and opossum are increasing, decreasing or stable," Broman added.

Furtakers that supply an email address will be sent confirmation that their report was successfully submitted and received, whether submitted online or by mail. (An email address can be provided when reporting a furtaker harvest online, when submitting a paper report, or when purchasing any ODFW license or document.)

Oregon has about 2,500 licensed furtakers. Furbearer hunting and trapping is a highly regulated activity in Oregon. Before becoming licensed, furtakers must pass an education course that deals with topics like wildlife identification, trapping ethics, and setting traps so they catch target animals in the most humane fashion. Regulations designed to promote the humane treatment of trapped animals make it unlawful to use certain types of traps. Traps are also prohibited from being set near trails, trailheads, campgrounds, and picnic areas.

Most furbearer hunting and trapping occurs in the winter and many seasons close in early spring, but some furbearers have an open season year round. If you are interested in becoming a trapper, email ODFW's Education Department at hunter.education@state.or.us for a copy of the home-study course required to obtain a license.

WHEN PUBLIC NOTICES REACH THE PUBLIC, EVERYONE BENEFITS.

Some officials want to move notices from newspapers to government-run websites, where they may not be easily found.

Why try to fix something that isn't broken?
