

UO eliminated from Final Four

"I am so sorry." That's what University of Oregon's Jordan Bell tweeted minutes after the Ducks ended their historic run during the NCAA tournament. The Ducks fell to North Carolina 76 to 77.

Bell has continued to take the blame for the Duck's tough loss after missing two free throws that may have made the difference in the slim margin of victory for North Carolina. However, students and instructors alike have taken to Twitter to comfort the distressed star noting that, without Bell, the Ducks would have never seen the Final Four.

The Ducks led the game at the start of the half but by the time the teams retreated before starting the second, UO trailed and after coming back to nearly tie the game after being seven points down with five minutes on the clock, Bell and the Ducks fell short.

UO ended their 13.1 point season as the 10 best record in the country before heading to the NCAA.

The trip to the Final Four marked the first for the team since 1939 when the Ducks took home the championship.
