of senior distance runner, Edward Cheserek, who won his seventh Pac-12 title by winning the 10K race in 29 minutes, 11.76 seconds. Overall, along with Cheserek's title on Saturday, the Oregon men took home two individual Pac-12 titles when Damarcus Simpson set the men's team up strong for Sunday by winning the men's long jump title. Starting Sunday with the Discus, the Ducks came out swinging. Ryan Hunter-Simms of Oregon, Arizona's Viktor Gardenkranz and Arizona State's Kyle Long shared an intense battle, but Hunter-Simms prevailed with a throw of 58.71M.

"It feels great. My main goal is to help my team as much as I can," King said. "With the double, I did that and with my teammate coming in second behind me, we swept both runs, so that was good too."

Sunday was made complete for the Ducks men when Kyree King, with a time of 10.09 and Damarcus Simpson, with a time of 10.27 kicked things off for the Ducks men in the 100 meter by finishing 1st and 2nd while recording the fastest times ever for themselves. King had another big performance in the 200-meter final, finishing first while Marcus Chambers finished second.

"Everyone went out there and competed," Raevyn Rogers added. "We didn't even think about points. That's what our coaches wanted. They don't want us to think about the points. They just want us to go out there and compete. I think we went out there and surprised people, because we're showing people what we can do as a team."

The Ducks now set their sights to regionals, where they hope to set themselves up for a return to Hayward Field for the NCAA championships in June.

"Everyone went out there and competed," Raevyn Rogers added. "We didn't even think about points. That's what our coaches wanted. They don't want us to think about the points. They just want us to go out there and compete. I think we went out there and surprised people, because we're showing people what we can do as a team."
