second. Washington, who took fourth in the 100 earlier in the day, came in as the reigning NCAA champion in both the 100 and 200. Stevens, who was second in the 100, was the Pac-12 winner in the 100 and 200 this year and previously made it to the 2016 Olympic finals in the 200.

With about twenty meters to go in the 200 Stevens was in first place but suddenly tripped and fell to the ground. Washington then finished in second behind Florida's Kyra Jefferson.

"I saw [Stevens] fall and my very first instinct was to turn around and go get her but I had to finish my own race first," said Washington. After Washington finished, she did go back to help her up which then caused Stevens to be disqualified from the race.

After losing points that were assumed to be a guarantee, it took a little bit of help from everyone to win the title. In addition to Rogers' 800 victory, teammate Brooke Feldmeier, who was not projected to score in the event, ended up taking third.

"I haven't really slept the last two days. I've just been really excited because I knew there was more left," said Feldmeier.

Oregon also picked up points from Katie Rainsberger's fourth place finish in the 1500, Sasha Wallace and Alaysha Johnson's fourth and sixth place finishes in the 100 hurdles, Elexis Guster's sixth place in the 400 and Samantha Nadel's eighth place finish in the 5000.

Outside of the Oregon women, there were a lot of key storylines at play at the NCAA Track and Field Championships. Here is a recap of some key moments from Hayward Field:

The Men of Oregon

While the women were soaring, then men were, uh, not.

After talking about the success of the women's team on Saturday, Oregon's coach Robert Johnson said, "We had a low point in our men's program yesterday."

The Ducks were setback a few weeks ago after senior and 17-time NCAA champion Edward Cheserek was ruled out of the NCAAs because of a back injury. This ruled out the team's chances to make a run at a title. The Oregon men ended up finishing ninth with points from Kyree King's fourth place finishes in the 100 and 200 and a pair of sixth place finishes from the 4x100 relay team and Marcus Chambers in the 400.

An Exciting Finish for the Men's Title

While the Oregon women's championship came down to the 4x400, so did the title on the men's side.

After losing to Texas A&M at the indoor NCAA Championships by half a point, the Florida men exacted their revenge and won the outdoor NCAA Championship by two points.

The stars of the show for Florida were freshman Grant Holloway and junior Keandre Bates. Bates led the way in the long jump where the pair finished first and second and he later would also win the triple jump competition. For Holloway he won the 110 hurdles and ran the anchor leg for the 4x400 team that took fourth which secured their title.

"I turned off my brain and just ran," said Holloway. "I just execute. Whenever I start to think, that's when things go left."

A Star in the Sprints

The big story of the meet came on the Wednesday when Tennessee's Christian Coleman ran a 9.82 100 which was a collegiate record. This vaulted him to becoming the fourth fastest American sprinter ever. Coleman went on to win both the 100 and the 200.

"Sky's the limit," said Coleman. "For me personally, I have a lot of confidence in myself and wasn't necessarily running for time. I was just coming out here trying to execute and when you do that, good things happen."

An Intense 10-Mile Run

The men's 10K final on Wednesday was not an incredibly spectacular race. But what made it interesting was when the winner, University of Tulsa's Marc Scott, revealed afterwards that on Monday he had a seizure during a run and had to stay in the hospital overnight.

"It was during my ten mile run on Monday; it happened at mile four," said Scott. "We were nowhere near where we parked our car so I had to run six miles back afterwards. But I felt great."
