

Library hosts teen art show

A piece of art work completed by Brenna Feigles, being considered during the library's teen art show this month.

Cottage Grove Library has an opportunity they started last year, allowing individuals between the ages of 12 and 18 to submit their art and have a silent auction where people can bid on an art piece. Those at the show can also vote which art piece was their favorite and the winner gets a yet-to-be-revealed prize.

Julie Jeanmard is the head of the youths services for the library and she is trying to reach out to the community to expand the youth program. The youth council helps put this show together by selling the art to help raise awareness of teen art in the community.

Jeanmard says, "During the summer, the summer reading program kids go on multiple trips, so this kind of funding helps the youth services program gain money for them to open up for more options and for them to buy books more in the correlation of their age. The youth head advisors aren't very persistent, sadly. We need more kids who will be here constantly supporting our group."

Jeanmard went on to say, "The community should be more supportive of our teen art. Teen art is very important, the kids should feel like their art is worth something. That is why we put this on, we did it in previous years, but we just gave their art away and the youth council thought it'd be a great idea to begin to sell their art. This is our second year doing the art silent auction, hopefully it turns out successful."

Brenna Feigles submitted two art pieces into this year's art show. She is a senior at Cottage Grove High school (CGHS) and one of her pieces was half African American, half lion.

"I drew this because there's so much controversy these days," Feigles said. "I drew it half lion because a lion is known to have so much pride within themselves, like we should have within ourselves, it doesn't matter what you look like or the race you are, we should all have pride within ourselves."

As for the art show, people may come and vote everyday for their favorite piece, until May 24. The ceremony night, which includes the end of the bids, and the announcement of who earned the most votes begins a 4:30 p.m. at the library. The bids will be updated everyday. Most art products in the silent auction will be starting at $2 and if someone bids the same, or higher they will continually go up in prices until voting ends.

BMD CHOOSES A THEME

Bohemia Mining Days will creep one year closer to its 60th anniversary when it sets up shop in Coiner Park this summer. And in keeping with tradition, the BMD board has decided on a theme for this year's festival: Every trail tells a tale.

BMD board member Cindy Weeldreyer said the theme will be incorporated into this year's Bohemia Nugget--a publication detailing the festival and its schedule--as it is every year. Weeldreyer will be responsible for penning the feature article based on the theme.

"Cottage Grove has a neat history," Weeldreyer said. She plans on exploring the history behind the "trails" around town including Row River Rd. and Mosbey Creek Rd.

The piece will be accompanied by art work created for the festival that features horse drawn buggies and local landscapes.

"We're really excited about it," Weeldreyer said.

While the festival always has a theme, it has seen some changes this year.

In February of this year, the BMD board announced that it would be cutting a day from the schedule.

"For the first time in its 58-year history, Cottage Grove's Bohemia Mining Festival will end on Saturday night and not Sunday afternoon," a press release read.

"BMD is all about tradition," said board president Cathy Simmons. "Yet as we go forward, circumstances force us to make changes like this one with an eye on our bottom line."

Simmons previously noted that it cost approximately $50,000 to host BMD each year. Last month, the board approved its 2018 budget of $55,450. The board noted that Sunday was traditionally the slowest day for the festival and may have seen fewer attendees this year due to Rainier Amusements, the third-party operator that contracts with BMD to provide the carnival, tearing down rides on Sunday instead of Monday this year.

The change from four to three days was also attributed to volunteer schedules with Simmons citing the small band of workers responsible for erecting and tearing down the elaborate props and settings used during the festival. "Most of our board members, spouses and festival volunteers take a week of vacation time to produce the festival and need to return to work on Monday," she said.

Bohemia Mining Days is scheduled for July 19 through the 21.

LORANE NEWS

Submitted by Lil Thompson

Lorane Grange enjoyed a good attendance of 25 for dessert and bingo. No one won the progressive blackout but all had a great time. They will not have any more dinner and bingo evenings until September. The progressive blackout continues to grow. Two people were only two numbers away, so.... see you in the fall.

About 30 people came out on Sunday to hear a Firewise Presentation to help prevent wildland fires in our area. For more information, call John Eckels at 541-517-5798 or any of the people on Easy Acres.

Lorane Grange meets this Thursday, May 3 at 7 p.m. The Grange men will serve in honor of Mother's Day. Several important items are on the agenda.

Come out on May 5 to enjoy some fun dancing hosted by Rural Art Center at Lorane Grange. A delicious taco dinner will be served by grangers. Doors open at 6 p.m., dancing starting at 7 p.m. Enjoy a great meal and dancing with your neighbors and friends.

Congratulations to Mrs. Hohnstein for receiving an award from the U. S. Air Force in recognition of outstanding support and dedication to the ideals and principles of the USA in her careers class and helping students get ready for their futures. Quite an honor! Again, Congratulations!
