

Latest Artwalk is page turner

The last Friday in June saw the traditional Art Walk continue with events scheduled through the summer. Downtown businesses open their doors to artists of all stripes with residents and tourists alike invited to visit, eat at local restaurants and enjoy live music in downtown. The Bookmine hosted several artists at the last Art Walk included Michael Copperman who is a finalist for the Oregon Book Award and Alice Tallmadge. Local jeweler Cathy Proffit and librarian Ruth Nichols were also in attendance.

since allowed the city to partner with other municipalities and avoid costly procedures other cities around the state are now facing. During Monday night's meeting, Public Works and Development Director Faye Stewart presented the board with a slightly altered intergovernmental agreement between Cottage Grove and Creswell. "The new agreement is the same as the IGA council adopted with the city of Veneta with one exception," he wrote in material given to the council. "Creswell will make quarterly payments of $22,792.50 starting July 1, 2018. Cottage Grove Building Program staff will keep records of service provision costs that exceed the $91,170." Stewart, who became certified as an inspector after being mandated to do so by the state, no longer has to serve in that capacity after the state withdrew the requirement. However, he informed the board that he can still serve as a "back-up" for the two employees of the new building inspection department. Last month, Meyers released an update stating that 41 building permits had been issued in Cottage Grove which generated more than $57,000. The city also handled the 25 building permits that were issued in Creswell and 38 permits issued in Veneta. The department also conducted inspections, investigations and held pre-application meetings for new construction projects in all three cities.

SIGN

The work is being funded, in part, by a grant from the city of Cottage Grove. According to the city's planning department, the project was awarded a historic renovation grant to refurbish the neon sign that hangs outside the entrance. The grant is awarded annually and is a one to one matching grant. "They worked with us to find a good contractor," City Planner Amanda Ferguson said. All work done on the building, under the terms of the grant, must be in compliance with historic renovation practices and the updates and remain for at least five years. According to Compiano, no price range for the apartments has been set, other than establishing that they would be considered mid-market units. However, the eight units in the Stewart Porter building are just the start. In the lot behind the building, Compiano said he plans to build additional apartments. He expects apartments to be available for rent at the end of this year, citing the work of local companies such as Stonewood Construction and architect David McQueen. "I love restoring old buildings," he said, speaking to the building sitting empty. "That building, it's in downtown and it's like having a pimple on your forehead. You can't miss it."
