

"Animal House" coming to museum

The Cottage Grove Museum celebrates the 40th Anniversary of the filming of "Animal House" with an exhibit of photographs by John Bauguess taken during the filming of the movie on Main Street in Cottage Grove. The exhibit runs now through September.

Bauguess is a well-known photographer, who over the past 40 years photographed scenes of everyday life throughout the area. Bauguess generously loaned the museum highlights of the images he took during the filming of Animal House in 1977 for this exhibit. The images include actors, extras and bystanders.

Cottage Grove Museum is located at 147 N. H Street in Cottage Grove. The museum is open Friday, Saturday and Sunday from 1-4 p.m. Admission is free, and donations are accepted.

For information, contact: Cottage Grove Museum Board President Becky Venice at 541-942-4269 or b_venice@msn.org.

ADA from A1

The ADA was passed in 1990 and aimed to curb discrimination against individuals living with a disability and it covers several aspects of public life including school, transportation and employment.

It's undergone an amendment process that was approved in 2008 and the changes can be seen as cities continue to update their infrastructure.

"In some places you'll see the yellow buttons," Meyers said, citing the strips of yellow, raised material at some intersections just before the sidewalk gives way to the street. "It's so people with a hearing disability know, 'Oh, ok we're coming to the road...'"

The Sentinel opened the question to residents, asking for areas of concern around town with many residents noting that Main Street had several areas that are difficult for those with disabilities to navigate including stories of individuals falling off curbs and being injured and others of families that no longer dine at local restaurants because it is difficult to access the sidewalk from the street parking.

"Eventually, there needs to be some plan that says we're replacing all of them (curbs) but we have 42 miles of sidewalks, double because there should be one on either side," Meyers said. "It's going to take time."

Pacific Power offers discount for would-be "green" car drivers

Pacific Power and Nissan have teamed up to offer a $3,000 incentive to Pacific Power's customers and employees who purchase a new 2018 Nissan LEAF. This incentive, which can be combined with federal tax credits and state rebates in Oregon and California for eligible customers, makes it easier than ever for Pacific Power customers to get on the road to cleaner driving.

"Pacific Power customers can fuel electric cars like a LEAF for the equivalent of about $1 per gallon and eliminate tail pipe emissions, oil changes and trips to the gas station," said Cory

Scott, Pacific Power's director of customer solutions. "This discount is one of the ways Pacific Power is helping customers take advantage of the healthy, easy and energy-efficient benefits of electric cars."

Customers can bring a copy of their Pacific Power bill and a flyer with offer details to a participating Nissan dealership to receive a $3,000 discount off MSRP on a 2018 Nissan LEAF. All Pacific Power customers and employees qualify for the Nissan discount, which expires Sept. 30.
