I Thought Turkeys Could Fly

Last week in this spot, I told you about the WKRP series starting over again, with the showing of the original two-part pilot. This week I wanted to add more information about the zany show set in a radio station. Perhaps the most remembered and most quoted line was: As God as my witness, I thought turkeys could fly". This classic Thanksgiving episode is scheduled to air tomorrow, April 18 at 9:30 p.m. on MeTV, 9.2.

When WKRP in Cincinnati debuted, actual radio DJs were jazzed, because they loved that the show portrayed sides of the industry you never see. They were such big fans that they would send in bumper stickers, posters, and other swag to decorate the walls in the station studio.

WKRP in Cincinnati became a legitimate vehicle for launching bands to pop success. The biggest band the show helped hit was Blondie singing "Heart of Glass". The group was so grateful, they donated a gold record to the show and you can sometimes see it hanging on the wall.

The theme song for WKRP in Cincinnati is a spectacular earworm that in many ways served as the show's hook. Series creator Hugh Wilson himself penned the catchy lyrics, which had us all tuning in to get the vicarious feeling of "living on the air in Cincinnati, Cincinnati, WKRP." That intro sounded much like a jingle. It was the cliché sound of 1980s pop/rock radio. On the other hand, the ending theme song had none of the intro theme's poetry, with lyrics that were pure gibberish and written on the fly, intended to be replaced later. Instead, Wilson thought it was a great joke in itself about how rock lyrics never make sense, so they left the lyrics as is.

Happy viewing,
Lloyd Williams, President
