'Senior Living' during a global pandemic

By DAMIEN SHERWOOD

With the loosening of coronavirus-related restrictions last week in Lane County, some residents are breathing a little easier and embracing the social opportunities afforded by the first phase of reopening.

Residents of senior living communities, however, still face a long road of lockdown amid the lingering public health threat.

"We, at Middlefield Oaks, have not had any confirmed cases," said Brittany Greco, community relations director of Middlefield Oaks Senior Living Community. "And I think it's because we have followed very, very safe protocols."

Senior living and long-term care centers around the country have severely restricted access due to the vulnerability of their resident age group and the coronavirus's tendency to inflict particularly severe damage on the elderly.

For two months of the COVID-19 spread in Oregon, Middlefield Oaks closed its doors completely and stopped admitting family, guests and new residents. Currently, the doors remain locked and temperatures are taken every time staff enter the facility where staff must also wash hands, fill out a form and receive new masks on a daily basis.

Grover turned out at The Brewstation (above) May 15 for the first day of the county's Phase One reopening, which allows restricted sit-down service in food and beverage establishments. While some local businesses have made adjustments to come into compliance with state requirements, others have delayed reopening as they strategize ways to meet the guidelines.

City Hall reopens to public access

Cottage Grove City Hall reopened to the public Monday, May 18, and will be open each day from 8 a.m. to noon and 1 to 4 p.m.

The public is still strongly encouraged to conduct business with City Hall by phone, email or other electronic means when possible.

Those who must come to City Hall will be reminded to follow social distancing requirements.

The building will not be open for meetings other than official City meetings and with attendance limited to no more than 10. Virtual attendance is still strongly encouraged.

Under Phase One Reopening guidance, park playgrounds, picnic shelters/structures,

EPA chooses CG for 'Local Foods' program

By DAMIEN SHERWOOD
DSHERWOOD@CGSENTINEL.COM

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has selected Cottage Grove to participate in the "Local Foods, Local Places" program, marking the city as the first community in Oregon to receive the opportunity.

"I am excited today to announce that Cottage Grove and 15 other communities across the country are receiving expert assistance to revitalize the local economy and improve the quality of community life," said Tim Hamlin, director of the EPA's Land, Chemical & Redevelopment Division in Seattle.

Cottage Grove was selected from an application pool of about 150 communities nationwide.

"It was really competitive," said Senior Sustainability Policy Advisor Vicky Salazar, who will be supporting the city through the process. "The proposal that was put forward by Cottage Grove really showed the commitment of the city to follow
