been floated among possibilities. Though many of the potential benefits of Local Foods, Local Places are still speculative, past successes with other communities bode well for a small town which will serve as Oregon's first experiment with the program. "One of the things that really gets us excited at the EPA is when we have programs like this where we're able to partner with local communities, learn what exactly it is we can do to help them and provide those resources from the federal level which help them achieve their dreams locally," said EPA Senior Public Information Officer Mark

MacIntyre. "These kinds of programs are the pure oxygen that keeps things going when times are difficult and when we face challenges ... We're really excited about getting going with Cottage Grove as quickly as we can."
