Bank from AI tap into another apparent need in Cottage Grove with the introduction of his office spaces.

Private offices, personal asked myself, which is, "What can I do to help Cottage Grove?" I didn't realize at the time that that would be such a life-changing ized he needed a better revenue model to accomplish the task of bringing lasting changing to the area.

That in mind, he got his real estate license and, after helping broker some local real estate deals, got to work on his own project with the Bank Building.

As the project nears completion, Blackstone feels he's accomplished the goals he's set out to do.

"I think we've played a small part of what needs to happen in Cottage Grove, which is to create an environment in which business can thrive and grow," he said. "It provides space for business to happen."

Blackstone added that he has a tremendous amount of gratitude for the ways the community has contributed to the project.

"The support that this project has had from this community is incredible," he said.

In reflecting on the contributions, Blackstone noted that he saw convergence of a diversity of people in to get the project done as a symbolic of the potential for unity.

Despite community members having vastly different viewpoints, Blackstone was heartened to see them come together.

"It didn't matter when it came to building this project and it doesn't matter with regard to building a community," he said. "What we have in common is so much greater and so much more important than how we differ. Our differences — our diversity — is actually our strength."

With the building on its feet and operational, Blackstone is now focusing on touching up the last few details to round out the project's completion.

"But in one sense, it's never done," he mused.
