Professor Marston

The late ex-Senator Tabor

Was bred in Peoria, Illinois, and died in Chicago, November 30, 1869.

The career of Horace A. T. Tabor, the famous Governor of Colorado, who recently died in Denver, was one of the most romantic and turbulent ever experienced by any man. He was a man of great wealth, and was one of the most successful business men of the country. He was also a man of great energy, and was always ready to take on any new project.

He was born in Vermont, in 1817, and in early life moved to the West, where he engaged in the lumber business. He soon became a successful businessman, and in 1849 he went to California, where he became one of the first prospectors. He discovered gold on the Platte River, and became a wealthy man. He returned to the East, and in 1860 he was elected to the United States Senate.

He was a great advocate of free enterprise, and was a strong supporter of the Union. He was a member of the Republican party, and was a friend of Abraham Lincoln. He was a man of great ability, and was a great leader. He was a man of great popularity, and was loved by all who knew him.

Tabor died in Denver, on November 30, 1869. He was buried in the Capitol Hill Cemetery, in Denver, Colorado.

"MEN GOTT, IT IS UNUSUAL"

An Austrian officer's curiously

Captain Teytel gave a vivid description of the fighting at Hagenstein.

He said, "I saw our men with an American officer in the front line. We were fighting at Hagenstein."

The Austrians had a great display of smoking and drinking, which we were not allowed to do. We had been living up to a certain standard of living, and it was not nice to see these people smoking and drinking.

"Oh, poor fellow," I replied.

"I suppose you have not seen a man like that before."

"We have many men like that in our army."

"That is true. But I am told that men will fight better if they are surrounded by such people."

"I suppose that is true."

"But I think it is better to have men who can fight."

"I suppose that is true.
