

CERVERA'S STRATEGY

A Statement by Captain Clark—
The Admiral's Chance of Escape.

In a personal interview in answer to a question by the editor, Captain Clark gives in the May Century the following opinion of the Spanish admiral's strategy:

"Assuming that the Spanish fleet had to come out and I, for one, had given up the hope that it would do so, it is my judgment that Admiral Cervera should have preferred night to day as the time for the sortie, notwithstanding the search-light watch so rigidly maintained at the entrance. He could have placed as guides to the channel, along the shore, and on the smokestack or mast of the sunken Merrimac, lights screened toward the sea, so that we could not have detected them. His best chance would have been to get up his anchors and begin to move about dusk, when he would have had light enough to see the shore and the channel marks, timing the movement so that he should dash out just as darkness fell. We could not then have closed in upon him without great danger to ourselves. The firing would have had to be done virtually in the dark, for the searchlights (even supposing that others than the one regularly in use had been turned on) would soon have become ineffective, on account of the smoke and from the shattering force of the guns, which probably would have extinguished them. The direction of the enemy could thus have been masked, and as each of our captains would have been concerned with the risk of his ship being rammed or torpedoed our onslaught would have had a far different result than it actually had when full daylight enabled every commander to see what all the others as well as the enemy were doing, and exactly what was to be done. It was the difference between certainty and uncertainty. In the daytime we were able to choose our distance from the enemy with relation to being torpedoed. As all his ships were supposed to be provided with Whitehead torpedoes, I determined, unless an emergency should require it, not to go inside of half a mile, that being the effective torpedo range, since our superiority in ordnance and armor would thus have been neutralized.

"Considering the courses that were open to Cervera, I should probably, in the circumstances, have done as he did—head to the westward, keeping the fleet together in the hope of destroying any vessel which might be able to overtake me. Cienfuegos was his nearest and natural port, and there he would have been in direct communication with Havana by rail, and, so to speak, would have been in a Spanish environment. If he had intended to go to Havana, it would have been better to go westward than eastward, for, though the distance is somewhat greater, the current would have favored, and there was no additional force to be considered like that at Guantanamo. To have divided his fleet, part going eastward and part westward would have been to leave one-half to Admiral Sampson and the other half to Commodore Schley.

"There remained one other course. The result of the sortie shows that he might have stood a better chance of saving one or two or even more of his ships by the policy of scattering, with an ultimate rendezvous. Only three of our ships were superior in speed to his vessels, namely, the New York, the Brooklyn and the Oregon—possibly the Texas. Even if each of these could have selected and pursued a Spanish ship, it is possible that not every one of them would have been equal to the task of destroying her antagonist. The armored cruisers, the Brooklyn and the New York, might have found that they had 'caught Tartars.' They could not have pierced the armor of the Spanish vessels, while the Spanish guns could readily have pierced theirs. There were no orders to our vessels for such separate action, for neither Admiral Sampson nor anyone else could have anticipated such tactics. It is a matter of pure conjecture, but I am inclined to think that the confusion resulting from such a movement would have strongly favored Cervera."—Oregonian.

Whooping Cough.

I had a little boy who was nearly dead from an attack of whooping cough. My neighbors recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I did not think that any medicine would help him, but after giving him a few doses of that remedy I noticed an improvement, and one bottle cured him entirely. It is the best cough medicine I ever had in the house. —J. L. MOORE, South Burgettstown, Pa. For sale by BENSON DRUG CO, Cottage Grove, JOE LYONS, Drain, Druggists.

Many old soldiers now feel the effects of hard service they endured during the war. Mr. Geo. S. Anderson, of Rossville, New York county, Penn., who saw the hardest kind of service at the front, is now frequently troubled with rheumatism. "I had a severe attack lately," he says, "and procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It did so much good that I would like to know what you would charge me for one dozen bottles." Mr. Anderson wanted it both for his own use and to supply it to his friends and neighbors, as every family should have a bottle of it in their home not only for rheumatism, but lame back, sprains, swellings, cuts, bruises and burns, for which it is unequalled. "JUST A MINUTE" WITH DEWEY.

When Dewey met the German there among the Philippines, He didn't like his uppish air, provoking stormy scenes; And when the German craved a fight and panted to begin it, "If war you want, you'll get it, sir," said George,

"in just a minute! "Go, tell your admiral," he said, the speech that I have made, And tell him if he dares to cross the line of my blockade, I'll blow his ship to kingdom com and everybody in it, And he'll have war to give away, in just a minute!

"I'm here to flout the Stars and Stripes; all other flags are barred; A rag like yours a man may buy for 30 cents a yard! Keep off the grass! Take down your sign, or else you won't be in it, For I will turn my gunners loose," said George,

"in just a minute! —J. Getcher Gunn in St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

TWO GIRLS.

As examples of feminine grit and perseverance we may refer to that displayed by Misses Minnie and Lizzie Beach, who assist their brother, John, in managing a farm just across the river. The young ladies are aged respectively 16 and 18 years, and during several years past they have carried and sold large quantities of milk in Corvallis. Every morning long before day-break in the winter they milk a number of cows, convey the milk to a skiff and row across the river, at times through a torrent of drift. To stem the current of the Willamette in the dark, when the river is high and full of drift is an undertaking which requires heroism and proficiency in watercraft. This operation is repeated twice a day the year round, and between times during a great portion of the season they sell a wagon load of farm products. These girls are orphans and their heroic efforts in the battle of life are attracting the attention of our people.—Corvallis Times.
