LOW well volunteers have borne their part during the last year, and Spain is now a free man. Her honor was preserved, her allies stood by, and the Spaniards, in spite of the fact that the war was lost, have gained their independence. The war of the United States against Spain was a war of liberation and not of aggression. It was not a war of conquest, but a war of defense. It was a war to free Spain from the yoke of the British and to grant her the independence she so long desired.

The United States entered the war to prevent the British from occupying Spain. The British had designs on Spain, and were planning to annex it to the British Empire. The United States, therefore, took up the cause of Spain and fought against the British. The war was fought primarily on the high seas, and the United States navy played a prominent role in it. The battles of the war were fought off the coasts of Spain, and the United States navy achieved many victories. The war ended in 1898, and Spain was granted her independence.
