FRIDAY, JULY 28 - 1899.

Robert G. Ingersoll, the famous agnostic, orator and lecturer is dead. He passes out of this world, known from north to south, from east to west, as one of the greatest infidels the world has produced. He leaves behind thousands who hate him on account of his brilliancy as an orator, speaker and satirist, which he turned in opposition to the Christian religion. He leaves behind him written works that will live long after his image shall have been erased from memory's disc—written works that shall live and be handed down to the rising generations, growing richer, brighter as the world grows older and wiser. It has been said that no man is free of faults. If Ingersoll had a fault, it was in his attitude toward the Christian religion. It has been said that no deed or act is committed, out of which some good does not arise. If Ingersoll's ideas, with reference to Christianity, are wrong, it is still within the bounds of reason to ferret out some good. He set the ecclesiastical fraternity to studying; he drew from among the great Christian brotherhood, the brightest stars, and through his magnetic efforts, flashed throughout the world by the medium of his matchless eloquence, they went to work as they never worked before. They burned the midnight oil in search of evidence with which to confront and weaken the great orator, and in so doing brought out truths and argument that strengthened their own fortifications. It is a noticeable fact that despite Ingersoll's thrusts at at Christian religion, in his circle of favorite friends could be found the leading lights of the pulpit. Only the class who were unworthy of his steel hated him. He lived in luxury and nothing was too good for the members of his family, but their wants satisfied, he turned his attention to the needs of others and much of his princely income went to soften the burdens of the less fortunate. He was generous and brave; the world can well afford to dry a tear in his memory.

Some way should be adopted whereby the management of the water system of the city can inform the patrons at what time the water supply will be shut off for repairs on the main. It is necessary of course to shut off the water occasionally, but nevertheless it always inconveniences the patrons, and especially is this true where no notice is served. A water alarm to be sounded on the fire bell could easily be arranged, and it would certainly meet the approval of many citizens.

This is the exact time of year when people don't care much whether school keeps or not, and get into the mountains or down by the sounding sea. Many of Cottage Grove people are that way inclined just at present and hardly a day goes by that some party bent on pleasure and rest does not depart for chosen camping grounds. It is a pleasure "devoutly to be wished," but if it keeps up much longer there won't be people enough left in town to hold corner's inquest.

"The Cottage Grove Nugget fills half a column finding fault with The Review for publishing a news article relating to the recent difficulty in the Bohemia district. The stuff is unworthy of notice. We might say, however, that a real news item in the Nugget occasionally would be a marked innovation."—Roseburg Review. After hunting through the Review's columns under date of July 24, in quest of a news item, and finding only Oregonian dispatches not later than July 21st, it is refreshing, indeed, to read the above narrow back-bite, out-ranked in narrowness only by the man who wrote it. However we have a sort of an idea that we would just as soon be not so "newsy" as to publish a falsehood.

Captain Sachs of Eugene is an ardent admirer of scenery, and he compares some of Oregon's scenery with that of Switzerland. A few days ago, speaking of the editorial association and of the hospitality of Eugene on that occasion, the captain made the remark that the morning the editors breakfasted on top of Skinner Butte was the first time many of the Eugene people became aware that they had a magnificent butte, and that all Oregon was draped in exquisite scenery. And in a sense Mr. Sachs is right. Oregonians are so accustomed to scenic effects that they fail to enter into the spirit of appreciation, and are only aroused to the realization of the fact upon listening to the glowing ejaculations of visitors.

A female Sam Jones is stirring the people in Missouri. Recently in a sermon she said: "There is a man in this house that is untrue to his wife, and I am going to throw this book at him." She raised the book for the throw and every man in the house ducked, but one, to avoid the book. Then she blistered the dodgers and lauded the one true man. It was afterward learned that he was deaf and dumb. —Ex.

At this season of the year the country towns and villages form a mecca for the fellows with the good thing who come from the "city" as a rule these good things are sold and usually the man (expecting something for nothing) is largely the one who is sold in the transaction. The remedy for this in our opinion is that of patronizing home industry to a large extent and if you do not get value received you can usually find the parties in the transaction easier than the fellow who "comes and goes."

A Few Thoughts

Koch, of Germany, has proven that microbes are the cause of Consumption. A. B. Griffiths, of Paris, has proven that Radams' Microbe Killer readily destroys microbes. Thus it cures Consumption. Of course I am only telling you what others think and have proven. But don't we learn by reading what others think?
