"NOTES:"

In the Cape Nome district men have been known to wash out as high as $500 and occasionally $1,000 per day, with a week, although the average in the beach diggings is about $60. Notwithstanding there are many men who drift homes with less money than they came with.

E. J. Jennings has a well written article in Saturday's Oregon, on the Blue River country. Mr. Jennings speaks in glowing terms of the prospective future of that acknowledged rich district, showing at once that while he is heavily interested in Bohemia property he is not adverse to doing justice to other districts. This is the right spirit and should be followed up by all mining men. There is room enough for everybody in Oregon, and if one district can't hold ten all there are others, and Blue River is one of 'em, and a mighty good one too.

An error appeared in last week's mining notes, in the matter of the bonded price of the Broadway property owned by Messrs. Griffith and Reed. The price should have been $50,000 instead of $5,000. However since last issue the bond has been declared off.
