The first thing was to go to such open-allnight places near by as were likely to have any of the printers that I knew, and I knew every jovini compositor in those days. We soon railled quite a force, from six to ten, I should say. Across the street was a livery stable. We went over there and helped ourselves to buggles and a crowbar. To take out the office books and papers not in the safe and then roll the safe to the sidewalk was a short job. The next thing was to bring down the By that time the fire lighted the editorial room, back of which the files were kept, and we had no trouble in finding our way, but it took a good while to get them all down. My orders were to pile them into buggies and take them on the North Side.

REMARKABLE SWORN STATEMENT ABOUT WOOD PRESERVATIVE.

Tence Post Impregnated With Avenarius Carbolineum Endures Twenty Years and Still Sound-

In an age when Wild, exaggerated statements of the efficiency of all kinds of articles, from patent medicines to patent plowshares, fill the columns of the press, for advertising purposes only, it is pleas-ing to write about a household specific whose usefulness has been proved beyond whose usefulness has been proved beyond the power of detractors to injure or imitators to compete with.

Such is Avenarius Carbolineum, the celebrated German wood preservative of the 19th century, whose fame is destined to outlast the 20th. It is not only the greatest preparation known for arresting the decay of any kind of woodwork, above or below ground, from the ravages of climate, fungus or vermin, but it may be truthfully described as the only preservative whose utility has been practically tested and not found wanting. Since the discovery of Avenarius Carbolineum nearly thirty years ago, it has been constantly employed for the treatment of wood used employed for the treatment of wood used in ships, bridges, pavements, ties, tele-graph poles, fence posts, house supports and hundreds of other constructions, and in not a single case out of thousands has it failed to render articles impreguated immune against rot and decay, whether the attacking enemics were climate, soil, fresh or salt water, teredoes, ants, boring worms or other hostiles, singly or in com-bination, when properly applied. The value of such a specific on a farm, where almost all the constructive work, from bouses and barns to vine poles and fence posts, is eniefly or entirely wood, cannot be overestimated. No farmer who appreciates practical economy can afford to do without it. As additional incentives for the use of Avenarius Carbolineum it risy be stated that the preparation is inexpensive, and a few gallons go a long way, while application is as easy and simple as that of common house paint. A few strokes of the brush does the work, and the article treated is insured against and the article treated is insured against here almost all the constructive work and the article treated is insured against decay and death.

As an illustration of the efficiency of Avenarius Carbolineum we publish the following photographic reproduction of two pieces of wood which stood side by side partly in and partly out of the ground, together with a sworn statement concerning the same attached, as seen in the picture.

We confirm that this piece of wood is a part of a fence board, which has been exposed to the weather for nearly twenty years. This fence was impregnated with Carbolineum Avenarius, and has always stood in very damp, mouldy ground (humus), around our warehouse. Not a single piece of wood in this fence has decayed during the time, as shown by above board, which stood partly in and partly out of the ground.

The fence post shown above was NOT impregrated with Carbolineum Avenariand we placed it five years ago alongs of the board, and removed both togethe. In their above condition.

The land for late potatoes should be plowed deep and harrowed fine. The land should never be allowed to form crust before the plants are up. Run a harrow over the field, both before and after the potatoes are up. The seed may be planted about five inches deep and given level sulture instead of hilling. Clover sod land is excellent for potatoes, and to avoid disease it is best not to plant potatoes on the same land twice in succession. Frequent and shallow cultivation rather than deep should be given.

The planting of waste land to trees for timber is receiving more attention than formerly. Farmers who planted trees 20 years ago now find that they then made good investments. It is claimed that cherry and hickory trees require bout 30 years before they are valuable for timber; maple trees 20 years and black walnut 15 years. A black walnut tree is said to attain from 12 to 15 inches in diameter in 15 years from the seed. Nuts are also a source of profit with some growers of timber.
