SUMMER RESORTS.

"To the mountains our people in increasing numbers yearly look for those days of relaxation and recreation necessary to maintain the human machine in fair working condition. The languorous sloth of the seashore proves very redemptive while it lasts, but many have decided that the annual outing should provide not only radical change of air and surroundings, but also such stimulation of flagging energies as will provide brawn and vigor for the return to labor. For this they urge the mountain climb and ramble, the balsam of the mountain pines, and the clear, unadulterated mountain air."
"In this direction the Shasta Route now affords a wealth of attractions. The entire line of road from Ashland to Redding is studded with charming and accessible hotels and camps, where are cheer and comfort and healing at reasonable cost, and where you can hunt, fish, ride, loaf, or play with equal facility."
"Or if you look for healing waters, none better can be found, hot or cold, than the springs of Ashland, Coalinga, Anderson, Bartlett, Byron and Paso Robles."
"Before visiting Europe, the people of the Northwest should see the glories of Yosemite Valley, and the wondrous groves of Mariposa and Calaveras; the Parisians are likely to make inquiries concerning these attractive resorts."
Send to Mr. C. H. Markham, General Passenger Agent, Portland, for new booklets on Castle Craig, Shasta Springs, McCloud River, Yosemite, and excursion rates thereto."

FOR THE SEASHORE.

"Newport and Yaquina Bay continue to offer for the summer vacation greater variety of attractions than can be found at any other North Pacific resort. Excellent beaches and safe bathing, enticing rides and rambles, good boating and fishing, clams, crabs and oysters for gathering, and unequalled profusion for pebbles and shells and agates. Add to this cheerful and obliging hosts, who are providing at very reasonable rates homelike quarters, and most liberal fares. They won't let one go hungry at Newport.

See Southern Pacific Agent for tickets and time tables, or correspond with C. H. Markham, General Passenger Agent, Portland, Oregon."

MINES MINING.

The Sixth of a Series of Articles on the Geological Construction and Formation of Mineral Zones.
[CONTRIBUTED.]

The animal world during the Jurassic period, if we may judge of it from its fossil remains, must have been much more varied alike on land and in the sea during the previous ages of the earth's history. From the circumstances in which the strata were deposited, relics of the life of the land are frequently met with, besides abundant records of that of the sea. Among the Jurassic strata there occasionally occur thin bands which have received the name of "insect beds" from the numerous insect remains which they contain.

Among these remains are forms of dragon-fly, may-fly, grasshopper and cock-roach. Fishes abound in the waters of Jurassic time. Those of which the remains have been preserved are chiefly small ganoids; there were likewise various tribes of sharks and rays. But taking the Jurassic fauna as a whole, undoubtedly its most striking character was given by the extraordinary development of its reptiles. So remarkably varied was the reptilian life throughout the Mesozoic ages that this part of the earth's history has been called the "age of reptiles." There were forms that haunted the sea, others that frequented the rivers, some that lived on the land, and some that flew through the air. Never before or since has there been such a profusion of reptilian types. Some of these are still represented at the present time; for example, the crocodile and alligator; the modern turtles too are descendants of those which lived in Jurassic times. But it is the long extinct types that fill us with astonishment. One of the most abundant of them is that of the sea lizard occasionally more than 40 feet long and somewhat resembling a whale in shape and bulk. Another form "Ceteasaurus," which was upwards of 60 feet from the snout to the tip of the tail and stood 10 feet high, fed on the vegetation that shaded the rivers and lagoons where it lived. Still more gigantic were the "Deinasaurus" of which the remains have been found in the Jurassic rocks of North America. The largest land reptiles now reached their maximum in size and variety. The largest of these monster reptiles and, so far as yet known, the most colossal animal that ever walked the earth was the "Atlantasaurus," which was upwards of 100 feet in length and 30 feet or more in height.

It was in the Jurassic period that birds first made their appearance, but they differed much from the modern bird; they had teeth in their jaws and some of them carried long lizard-like tails, each vertebra of which bore a quill feather. On the whole they possessed certain peculiarities that linked them with reptiles. The Cretaceous system received its name in Western Europe because in England and Northern France its most conspicuous number is a thick mass of white chalk. It covers a far more extensive area of the surface of this continent than any of the preceding systems. The Cretaceous limestone of Southern Europe and the basin of the Mediterranean are prolonged through Asia Minor into Persia, where they cover a vast area. They have been found likewise in the flanks of the Himalaya mountains, so that the open Cretaceous sea must have stretched right across the heart of the Old World.

Cretaceous rocks cover an enormous area in North America; they attain no great thickness in the Eastern states, but they thicken southwards, until in Texas they present massive limestones, indicative of deeper and clearer water than elsewhere in that region. They attain gigantic proportions in Colorado, Utah and Wyoming, where they are prolonged northward into the British territories, with a maximum thickness of 11,000 to 13,000 feet. They have yielded a remarkably abundant and varied series of organic remains. Rocks assigned to the Cretaceous system cover a wide region of Australia, and they also attain considerable thickness in New Zealand.

WAS IT A MIRACLE? The marvellous cure of Mrs. Rena J. Stout of Consumption has created intense excitement in Cammack, Ind." writes Marion Stuart, a leading druggist of Muncie, Ind.
