SIDE TALK.

Some people have queer ideas of methods to be employed in the matter of reforming those who have wandered from the straight and narrow path.

The trouble with the most of us, we are too proud and have too great a regard for what some very good friend whose grace we wish to court, and who in reality is too purse-proud and bigoted to deserve the association of God's children, will be offended if we reach down and give a helping hand to the boy who, mayhap, has been "wild" for a time, or if we should dare to throw some goodly influence within reach of the wayward women.

You will never save a boy from the influence of evil associates by calling him a "tough" and declining to associate with him. If you really want to save him or help him to do better, go to him—he won't hurt you.

The mother will never bring back the wayward girl by pushing her into the street and slamming the door; the friend of the young girl who has escaped the sting of criticism and whose discreetness has perhaps saved her from the foul monster slander, will never bring the poor broken-down spirit of her girl friend back into the pure life by imparting to her the generous (?) information that if she will reform and repent and stay glued to the anxious seat a year or two she may condescend to take her out to prayer meeting with her some evening.

If she wants to help her friend whom fate has treated less kindly than she, she should bring about that reform through her own instrumentality by going to and being with, and casting the sunlight of love and purity within reach of the heart, that in the majority of cases, so years for, yet knows not how to possess, a better, grander and nobler life.

You will never save a misguided boy or girl from the influences of vice, by disdainfully telling them of their sins, and barring them from the society of those who are their betters. Rather let them in. Give them an idea of that which is better, and the battle for good is half fought—a soul is all but saved.

If your life is so much better than theirs don't be afraid to let these poor, broken hearts who so hunger at times for a kind word—a look of sympathy—a hearty handshake, have a glimpse of that which is beautiful.

Practicing that which you preach—don't expect anyone to buy your stores until you show them. Some skeptical wretch might doubt that you have anything worth buying.

One of the numerous candidates for president of Ecuador, has withdrawn from the coming presidential race. No one has yet intimated that his name is Bryan.

Wouldn't this kind of weather freeze you?

FRATERNAL INSURANCE.

New York Spectator. To those familiar with the facts in the case, no surprise was occasioned by the application made last Friday in Indianapolis for the appointment of a receiver for the Order of Chosen Friends. This order is one of a number of similar concerns which have been hanging on the ragged edge of insolvency for some years past.

The nineteenth century may truly be called a pace-maker for the civilized world. From its dawn every civilized country seemed to become suddenly alive with the spirit of progress, and as the years flew by and the gallant youth reached high noon and drifted into dotage the dim eyes were gladdened with the vision of magnificent conquest.

The nineteenth century now past and gone, has paved the way for results in the various sciences and along educational lines in the twentieth century which now seems beyond conception.

A great century has passed into historic keep giving way only for the dawn of a greater one.
