OREGON LEGISLATURE.

Those who visited the legislative halls of Oregon last week expecting to see an re-enactment of the exciting scenes prevalent at former senatorial elections were certainly disappointed, and no doubt heartily so. A calmness prevades the two legislative bodies in reference to the senatorial affair which is surprising and unknown in the history of senatorial elections in Oregon. When one recalls the great struggle and bitterness during Mitchell's fight in the early eighties and then the strife and excitement prevailing during the last hold up, it is quite impossible to imagine the present calm and placid temperament. The members seem to be there this session with something else in view besides electing a United States senator, although to be sure, that is a duty none should neglect, and all should exercise every effort to effect. It is purely and simply a business session. Every member in either house or senate seems to be looking into the affairs of law and law making with keen interest, and all seem to have a splendid idea of economy, a feature heretofore unknown in Oregon legislative circles. Representatives McQueen, Harris and Hemenway from Lane, have their work well in hand.

Another commendable feature of the present session is the scarcity of clerks, credit for which no doubt must be laid to Senator Kuykendall from Lane through the medium of the law governing clerks and clerk hire, known as the "Kuykendall Law."

Much cheap talk has been going the rounds to the effect that votes are being bought right and left, and one would think to hear some of the vicious talk along this line that the legislative halls of Oregon are being turned into a second-hand junk shop. Upon mature thought, however it will be determined that while some money may be used in the fight for senator, it is not very promiscuously flung in the faces of the legislators, else they are a class of men far above the standard as depicted by the average political orator who is now dwelling upon the affairs of the state at much length.

One might be excused for giving voice to the assertion that there is considerable honor yet in the make-up of candidates and members alike. This in itself is, no doubt, a poor and unpraiseworthy compliment to all parties concerned, but notwithstanding, taken in the face of the degrading and unmanly comments flung broadcast in the face of both members and candidates, it will no doubt be gratifying.

In view of the fact that Corbett has been accused of vote buying, in the event of his defeat it will certainly reflect credit upon each and every member. Should McBride be the lucky man, it being generally known that he does not possess the sack, no harsh words can be said relative to money and influence in his vote getting. Mitchell is said to be without financial funds, so it stands to reason whoever shall win, unless new developments shall alter the financial conditions attendant upon the election, shall reflect credit upon the campaign and give the cry that money is responsible for the election of a senator the lie. To the casual observer there is some remnant of honor still in Oregon politics—thank God.

The curfew ordinance of this city seems to have good effect. Occasionally some youngster rebels, but he maketh home just the same, or else he walketh along side of Night-watchman Nunn to the cooler where he cooleth to a low degree of temperature.

CREDIT WHERE CREDIT IS DUE.

Mr. Cushman, congressman from the state of Washington, in his criticism of the river and harbor committee in which he says some very satirical things about the Columbia river appropriation and Congressman Tongue, has proven very conclusively that Oregon has an able and well qualified representative in the person of Mr. Tongue. In its report of Congressman Cushman's speech against the river and harbor bill, the Washington Post of Jan. 11, has the following: "Imperial Caesar, Mr. Cushman said, had divided all Gaul into three parts. Caesar was an ancient and provincial. Had he lived to the dawn of the twentieth century, said he, he would have divided 'gall' into enough fragments to give one to each member of the River and Harbor Committee. He was especially severe in his criticism of the appropriation secured by Mr. Tongue of Oregon for his state, calling attention to the fact that though $5,000,000 had been expended upon the Columbia river between Portland and the sea, the depth of water was today less by seven feet than it was before a dollar was expended."

This sounds quite different to the remarks of the Oregonian of the 1st instant when it patted Congressman Cushman on the back, to the unjust detriment of Congressman Tongue, from which the following is an extract:

"Let us give credit where credit is due, but let us also give credit to the Washington and Idaho, delegation at Washington for the Snake and Columbia river appropriations. If these rivers flowed through Oregon, we might have less to pat ourselves on the back about."

Mr. Tongue is an able and consistent worker and is deserving of more consideration than the flourishing of praiseworthy editorials in favor of such congressmen as Cushman, whose very utterances condemn him as having taken any stand other than that of opposition to the Columbia river improvement.

In the foregoing words of the Oregonian "let us give credit where credit is due."

Fewer counties in the great state of Oregon can boast of better looking, more manly or more business like men than those composing the Lane county delegation in the senate or house.

It is high time the city took occasion to replace and repair the side walks which were damaged and displaced during the recent high water.
