FRIDAY, JUNE, 21 1901.

There are more good fish-story tellers 'round-about here and less good fishermen than any other place in Oregon, Eugene notwithstanding.

The good ship "Oregon," reference to which fills the heart of every Oregonian with pride, after steaming thousands of miles on every sea, and taking part in the stirring naval scenes of the Spanish-American war is again at home. May she add to her achievements as time wears on.

The Portland papers from time to time have advocated the necessity of that city securing the erection of a smelter. The project should not be lost sight of and should be argued upon every street corner. Portland is the proper place at the present stage of development of Oregon mines, for a smelter, for the simple reason that it is sufficiently centrally located to demand the patronage of not only Oregon mines, but Washington as well. A smelter of sufficient capacity to interest smelter capital, costs money, and in its erection it stands to reason that it should be located where it can command all the business that naturally falls to a smelter, thereby giving it all the opportunity possible to make the enterprise remunerative to its operators. It has been argued that a smelter could be made to pay in Bohemia. While it is doubtful in the minds of the conservative that the development work in Bohemia at this writing is sufficient to justify the erection of a smelter to properly handle the ores, it must be admitted by all that the ore in Bohemia now on the dump, and which could readily be supplied to a smelter, would go a long way toward keeping a plant in operation. The mining districts of Oregon are well scattered over the state, and if there is any doubt of Bohemia being unable to supply sufficient ore for a smelter, it is fair to presume that no other camp in Oregon is in a position to do so. If this is true, and it still appears that a smelter is the crying need, why in the name of common sense is it not a worthy effort on the part of the mining men of the state to co-operate and induce capital to build one in Portland where every camp in the state can take advantage of its capacity, and at the same time give the operators an opportunity to draw a certain amount of patronage from camps outside the state? Some say Bohemia needs a smelter—others say Blue river needs a smelter. Would not the statement stand qualified if we would say a smelter should be built where both Bohemia and Blue River can treat their ores? A smelter needs ore, thousands of tons of it to make it a profitable investment, and no one wishes to see money invested in an unprofitable enterprise. On the basis that a smelter would pay in Bohemia, with the amount of ore that could be furnished, is it not fair to presume that it would be more profitable if it could treat the ores from Blue River as well? If it would be more profitable to treat the ores from Bohemia and Blue River, would not the profit be materially increased if the same smelter could treat the ores from every camp in the state? Geographically, taking in good faith the assertion that no mine in camp is in a sufficiently advanced condition to crowd a smelter to its limit, Portland is the proper place to build the first smelter, and the mining men of the state should put the scheme into operation at the earliest moment.

Build a smelter at Portland and if, with the patronage of the camps of the state, it proves to be a success, then there is plenty of time to build a smelter for the individual camps.

In the event it don't rain, the present condition of affairs indicate a "long dry spell." This prophesy is not copyrighted. The weather man may use it if he wants to.

A few weeks of this kind of weather will make the roads to Bohemia in splendid hauling condition, and then will commence the hauling of thousands of tons of supplies to the mines.

The health of Mrs. McKinley still improves slowly. It is the hope of the nation that the good lady may live to the end of President McKinley's eventful public life, and then, to make the seclusion of their private home, happy.

The time is perhaps remote when we shall have a smelter in Bohemia district. However, it is not a long way off when the erection of one at Portland will be demanded, and those interested in Bohemia should encourage the proposition.

A SPRAINED ANKLE QUICKLY CURED.
