A. J. Snell wanted to attend a party, but was afraid to do so on account of pain in his stomach, which he feared would grow worse. He says, "I was telling my troubles to a lady friend who said: 'Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy will put you in condition for the party.' I bought a bottle and take pleasure in stating that two doses cured me and enabled me to have a good time at the party." Mr. Snell is a resident of Summit Hill, N. Y. This remedy is for sale by Benson Drug Co., Cottage Grove, Lyons & Applegate, Drain.

FEEDING FOR EGGS

Just as soon as eggs get to be a good price Dame Partlet, the hen, fails to furnish them. There are other reasons for this than cold weather. It is true that warm quarters are desirable and perhaps necessary, yet the feeding of the fowls is the most important requisite. In the summer time the farm hen is roaming the fields, eating bugs, seeds and green foods of all kinds, with access to gravel and other requisites necessary for the production of eggs. In order to have the same productions we must imitate the summer conditions as closely as possible. The usual custom of farmers is to carry their hens through the winter on an exclusive diet of wheat. While wheat is excellent for fattening it is a failure as a provocative of egg laying. While hens intended for market should be closely confined and fed on grain the opposite practice should be followed if we keep them for layers. Their feed should consist for the most part of small grain, cut clover and green food, if procurable. They should be in sheds protected from the extreme cold and wet, and for this purpose a commodious scratching shed, built for that purpose, will repay the cost. Scatter the grain among straw or clover hay spread on the floor of the shed and make them scratch for it. This gives them the exercise, without which they will not lay. Give them plenty of pure water, cut bone and gravel, and imitate summer conditions as near as possible, and the egg basket will show the result.

FOR FORTY DAYS HE ATE NOTHING.

Thomas Morrin Rivals the Exploit of the Famous Dr. Tanner.

Throughout His Prolonged Fast He Attended as Usual to His Duties.

S. F. Bulletin. According to the statement of his physician, Dr. D Albert Hiller, the remarkable feat of fasting for forty days has been accomplished by Thomas Morrin, the chief engineer of the Mills building. It is said that from November 5 to December 15 of this year Morrin took no solid food whatever and no liquid except water and about half a pint of Sauterne.

Through all of this period of fasting Morrin has continued to perform his duties at the Mills building. His fellow employees had no idea that he was doing anything so unusual as to abstain from all food. They did not imagine that a rival of the famous Dr. Tanner was in their midst. "I thought he was sick," said one of them today, "but I never supposed that he was off his grub altogether." So far as his associates in the building could observe, there was no diminution in Morrin's strength or activity. He was at his post every day, and though it could be seen that he was losing weight, he did not appear emaciated.

Morrin dislikes to talk of his remarkable fast and resents the notoriety which it has brought him. He absolutely refused today to discuss the matter and turned away to take a glass of water, his only sustenance during his fast, and still taken by him in large quantities. Prolonged ill health led Morrin to adopt the plan, under Dr. Hiller's advice, of giving his digestive system a complete rest. The heroic remedy proved successful, for Dr. Hiller declares that his patient has now completely recovered.

"He is a well man," said Dr. Hiller. "It is a fact that he took no food whatever for forty days, and this has worked his cure. There is really nothing so extraordinary about the case. Fasting is an effective remedy for dyspepsia and similar troubles. When the system is almost worn out, from any cause, fasting is the natural cure. Several of my patients have tried it with excellent results."

On the first day of his fast Morrin suffered severely from the pangs of hunger, but this soon decreased until he finally lost his appetite altogether. On the eleventh day of his fast Morrin attempted to take some solid food, but he had no sense of hunger, and all that he ate was a small baked potato and one piece of toast—in all about three or four ounces. This was the only time during the forty days when he took any solid food. As the result of his prolonged abstinence from nourishment Morrin lost thirty-five pounds in weight. His appearance, however, has undergone no marked change.

My mirror shows me a face that's fair; A face that men love to see; Radiant eyes and masses of hair That catches the sunshine in glee. Always and ever the crowd will turn For notice and gracious smile. I saw the woman yesterday I would like to be a while.

A slip of a girl-wife, pale and young, With a baby on her knee; The look she wore was heaven's own, A joy that was ecstasy.

I, in my furs and diamonds, sat Watching her, plain and poor— She was the woman I'd like to be In a life as simple and pure.

The light of the gems and garments gay Are nothing compared to love. No beauty as that look which gives The thought of heaven above. I know that she, by good and right, Is the owner of thought serene: The mother is, in the hearts of men, Sovereign more than a queen.

—Elizabeth Cherry Waltz.

THE GINGERBREAD TEST.

The late President Faure of France was a vain man, and those about him diplomatically played upon his vanity; but on one occasion he heard the truth when he least expected it.

He had invited the officer of the Elysee guard to breakfast, much to the trepidation of that official, a very shy gentleman. Suddenly Monsieur Faure turned to the officer and asked:

"Am I popular?" Taken off his guard and yielding to the truthful impulse, the officer replied: "I do not think so, Monsieur le President."

"And why do you not think so?" asked the president, rather sharply.

"Because," said the officer, slowly, "my father told me that he only realized Monsieur Thiers' popularity when he saw his portrait in gingerbread in all the booths at the fair on the Place du Trocadero; and I have not noticed your portrait in this way, Monsieur le President."

Monsieur Faure thought a minute, and then he said, very gravely: "That's true. I thank you. I had not thought of that." The fact that he had never been worked over in gingerbread for the delight and admiration, to say nothing of the nourishment, of the public seemed to worry him for the rest of the day.
