ANGORA GOATS.

They are the typical machine for clearing brush land.

They clear up the underbrush in your groves.

They clear out the willows in marsh lands.

They clear up the weeds in the corners of your farm. They are the grub hoe and axe, with power to wield both, with no charge for board or costly manchinery, or oil to keep its bearings cool. They are the whole thing; board themselves and just go on clearing the land and only wait for more fields to conquer. In addition to all this you get a crop of kids annually as well as a crop of mohair, worth as much as any fleece of sheep's wool. Again you get (you may not believe it, but it is true) as good a carcass as any mutton sheep when fattened and fitted for the market. By comparison, the fat yearling Angora is a fat mutton of like age, just what a fat saddle of venison is to the like cut from the carcass of beef, No farmer can afford to be without a few gleaners, and the number may be proportion to the land he has to clear.
