Neighbors and friends dropped in quite informally, music enlivened the gathering, talk which range? from the grave to gay was not without its humor and its wit, and as all present were delighted, they all contributed to the delight. When the guests departed, the German, who had draited life to the dregs, had seen society from the Paris Fautourg St. Germain to St. Petersburg, and from Rome to London, was impelled to say that there was the idyllic and the true society. No lackeys, no pro-digious expense, no frigid formality. attractive as it was natural and wholesome. The German confessed he had discovered a new Arcaly, and that soslety in its new manifestations was a return to the naturalness of former days, which indicated a real advance, a higher civilization. The simple life is of, however, so common nor so fre quently an object of desire in America of to-day as to be typical. Those who have means are in so breathless a race to spend, to make a display, to ourde their rivals, to seek pleasure instead of letting pleasure come to them, that artific a lity, as in all rich societies, has crowded simplicity and naturalness too much into the background. The desire for money is natural, and it is likewise highly commendable. Money means comfort, education for children, protection against old age and alckness. opportunity for self-improvement, and it provides many of the things which distinguish life to a civilized country from life in the haunts of the savage.
