Substitute for Diamond Drills.

The price of black diamonds, used for core rock drills, having risen in forty years from three dollars to fifty dollars per carat, a substitute for them has long been sought, says the Youth's Companion. One such substitute is furnished by the shot drill, invented by Mr. Davis, an Australian. In this ma-chine the place of the diamond-cutters is taken by chilled steel shot, fed through a hollow rod in the drill, which wear away the rock by a crushing or grinding action.
