THIS PAPER is kept on file at E. C. Drake's Advertising Agency, 24 and 25 Merchants Exchange, San Francisco, California, where contracts for advertising can be made for it.

FRIDAY, JUNE 24, 1904.

From now on we can expect the arrival of a good many who are interested in the mines of Bohemia. Several have arrived this week and have gone on to the district.

More Time Wanted.

Some complaint has been made at the short time given for the election of a Director and Clerk of the school board on last Monday.

Less than an hour was consumed in the whole proceedings. Probably the result would not have been changed had the polls been kept open for some hours. Yet, the people who were unable to be present during the short time of balloting would have felt they had taken part in the election and have been satisfied.

At the May meeting of the directors of the Massachusetts Society for the prevention of cruelty to animals and the American Humane Education Society, held May 18th, it was voted that in memory of the generous gift of the late A. B. Wentworth the Massachusetts Society hereby offers to the Selectmen of each of the over three hundred Massachusetts country towns $20 to aid in establishing watering troughs or foundation for animals, attached to which should be an iron cup for the use of human beings, and on or near which shall be inscribed or painted the words, "Blessed are the merciful."—Our Dumb Animals.

Valuable Information.

We are in receipt of a large folder issued by the Southern Pacific rail road officials.

It contains condensed information about Oregon resources, industries, commerce, products, climate, etc., with a map of Oregon.

They have also in conjunction with the O. R. & N. railroad, issued a book of nearly 100 pages, descriptive of the resources of the states of Oregon, Washington and Idaho. The book is well illustrated and contains a map of the three States. Those desiring to learn of the great Northwest, can be supplied with this book by enclosing 4 cents in stamps to A. L. Craig Passenger Agent O. R. & N., or W. E. Coman, Passenger Agent Southern Pacific, Portland, Ore.

The Country Newspaper.

"The country newspaper is the most useful of all the agencies which stamp the impress up in villages and inland cities. Without the aid of local newspapers towns are, as a rule, thriftless and dead. It is common for all great men to speak with contempt of local newspapers, but the village newspaper makes more great men out of less material—more bricks without straw—than any other factor in politics, and is the ladder on which men climb to local distinction as the beginning of wider fame. The advent of the local newspaper has always dated the increased thrift of the community. The local newspaper is the life of the locality, and the measure of its purpose, as a rule, measures the advancement of people."—Nile (Mich) Daily Star.

Growth of the Telephone.

Oregon Daily Journal.
The telephone, now so common, and as we think indispensable, is a young institution. Thirty years ago there were no telephones, and, consequently, no hello girls. How did business men get along those days? And what would hello girls do now if the telephones were all exterminated?

Now there are in use in this country 2,315,000 telephones of all kinds, and their use employs 65,000 wage earners, besides 15,000 salaried officials and clerks, earning $36,000,000 yearly, all of whom owe their jobs to this invention. Back to these stand the men who made the 4,300,000 miles of telephone wire used, besides other material.

The total capitalization of telephone companies in the United States is $384,000,000 (including water, however) and their revenues last year were $87,000,000.

And how many talks? Nearly 6,000,000,000 last year. And what a vast number and variety of things were talked about! Again how under the sun could we do business without the telephone?

What a marvelous change, what an immeasurable value, benefit, one simple idea worked out into practice has wrought! And the telephone is not yet 30 years old!

A Right Movement.

The Nugget is in receipt of a communication from Tom Johnson, manager of the Portland Commercial Club, in which he states: a convention will be held in Portland Tuesday and Wednesday, August 2nd and 3rd, under the auspices of that club for the purpose of formulating plans for the proper advertising of the resources of the State of Oregon.

Every editor in Oregon to be a delegate at large, the Mayor of every city and town, County Commissioners, president of every organization, whose object is to up build the interests of the State, will have a right to appoint delegates.

The Nugget is in favor of every movement tending to the proper advertising of the States resources. Portland as the great commercial Center should take the initiative and every other city or village should act in full accord with it.

The Nugget will be ready to co-operate with the movement.

Mardi Gras Carnival.

CARE OF DUCKLINGS.

Conditions Which Favor Their Growth and Development.

The incubating of ducks' eggs is not different from hatching of hens' eggs, but the care of young ducks is radically different in many respects from that required for chicks, says H. A. Nourse in Reliable Poultry Journal. Unlike chicks, the ducklings must be removed from the incubator very soon after the hatch is complete and the young ones dried off. The nest of the brooder after the ducks are in should be little less than that of the nursery in the incubator from which they are taken. This rules from 85 to 100 degrees, and should be continued for twenty-four hours, during which the ducks should be kept under cover most of the time.

The first feed should be given when they have been in the brooder a few hours, and nothing is better than stale bread moistened with skimmed milk, in which is sprinkled a little coarse sand or fine grit. It should be fed on shallow tin plates, which are easily cleaned and frequently scalded. After the first day food should be offered four or five times a day and any not eaten promptly removed. If a sufficient quantity is available, the bread and milk diet should be continued for two or three days, when wheat bran and cornmeal in the proportion of two parts bran to one of meal may be added, gradually increasing quantity from one-third at beginning to three-quarters at the end of the week. A proportion of one-quarter bread may be continued with advantage, and the sand or grit should be 5 per cent of the whole from this period on. Powdered charcoal sufficient to make it pretty black may be sprinkled in the food once each day, and granulated charcoal and grit need to be within reach of the young ducks constantly.

Water with the chill taken off should be within reach. Ducks must have water even though they spend their spare time in distributing the contents of their drink dish over the surface of the pen, creating a condition decidedly detrimental to their well being. To avoid this it is sometimes advisable to remove the water after each meal, a fresh supply being provided for the next.

If the beginning of the second week finds the ducklings strong and full of life, it augurs well for a fast and steady growth to killing time or to maturity. The ration and manner of feeding it may remain unchanged, but the youngsters must have more exercise; part of which should be in the open air and on grass when convenient.

Green food should be provided from this time forward. If early in the season, chopped cabbage or mangrel warts may be fed separately, or steamed cut clover from which the strong stems have been removed may be fed in the mash, making 20 per cent of the whole. But when green grass or clover can be obtained it is much to be preferred and should be gathered, cut fine and fed in the morning while the dew is on.

Animal food is needed after the first week. Beef scraps are most in favor for this purpose on account of its availability and keeping qualities. It should be sifted for the young ducks until they are three weeks old and may be increased in quantity from 5 per cent of the mash during the second week to 10 or 12 per cent at the end of three weeks.

This ration will give good results until it is time to fatten the birds for market.

Rearing of Chicks.

The best plan I know of to get broody hens to take the chicks from an incubator is to give the hen two or three eggs out of the incubator on the eighth or ninth day and allow her to hatch them, says W. R. Graham in the Ontario Agricultural college bulletin. When your incubator hatch is over, take a dozen or fifteen chickens and put them under the hen after dark. Even if they happen to differ in color from those she has hatched, she will mother them all the same. If you give them to her in the daytime, she may not do so. Never neglect to give the hen a thorough dusting before giving her any eggs. If there is one thing more than another that requires careful attention in rearing young chickens, it is to keep them free from lice. If lice get upon them from the hen or elsewhere, a large proportion of them will be sure to die.

To Kill Lice on Chicks.

Bear in mind that when using oil or grease of any kind on fowls only a little should be applied, as grease will do away chicks. As a spray for poultry house use kerosene emulsion (or kero sene), adding a gill of sassafras oil and half a pint of crude carbolic acid to a gallon of kerosene or emulsion. Two or three applications will destroy not only the lice, but the "nits" and eggs.
