

LANDSCAPE GARDENING.

The Natural and the Formal Styles. The Lawn a Beautiful Picture.

As Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer in one of her books so pertinently remarks, "two trees and six shrubs, a scrap of lawn and a dozen flower plants may form either a beautiful little picture or a huddled disarray of form and color." The people should have ideals in landscape gardening as well as in painting, architecture and music. They should be familiar with the different styles and be able to distinguish between the artistic and the glaringly bad forms. In manufacturing districts you often see blocks of houses, sometimes of very good design, with the most barren surroundings. The deadly monotony could be broken by the concerted action of the neighborhood, producing a unity in variety. The people must be led to see the possibilities of such work before their interest and cooperation can be secured. A leading hand must assist them. In the suburbs of cities there are many houses situated in spaces, grounds with every natural advantage, where there has been no attempt at landscape gardening, not even "the two trees and six shrubs."

The two great styles are the natural or English style and the architectural or Italian style. They are entirely unlike and could not be used together without the greatest discord. The divergence is proportional to the perfection of the types. The natural method or English style is most generally used in America and England and the one with which we are most familiar, although the Italian style is rapidly gaining in favor and in some situations is the only appropriate one.

The charm of the natural style is secured by open lawns, curved lines, grouped trees, massed shrubbery and union of building with grounds. The naturalness is lost by straight line artificial constructions, white surfaces and badly mutilated plants.

The striking characteristics of the architectural style are the harmony of arrangement between the building and the surrounding landscape, including the gardens, terraces and groves, the architect of the house being the architect of the garden. The unity in the architectural style is gained by proper geometrical lines, closely shaven lawns, trees in rows, clipped trees and shrubs, architectural and statuesque features, sharp color contrasts or monotonous, terraces, fountains, flowers in beds or pots.

The formal style of landscape architecture of the Italian renaissance was the natural outgrowth of the architecture and art of the period, and the gardens of Italy have ever since served as models.

The landscape artist has a wealth of material on which to draw—the natural contour of the surface, the erect drooping, spreading or massive trees; great variety of trees, shrubs and flowering plants, the marvelous color effects in foliage, the diverse texture of the foliage of trees, shrubs and herbs; the change in color from the gray greens of the early spring, deep greens of the summer, oriental splendors of the fall; the subtle coloring of the twigs in winter, the grouping of the objects in the distance, middle and foreground; the ever changing atmospheric conditions and cloud effects, the bit of sea or lake, the gentle but diversified sky line.—Louisa K. Miller, Dayton, O.

the state. In size and coloring it is all that the eye could desire, but its flavor is low. So vigorous is its bearing habits, however, it proves a valuable cross with the better flavored cultivated kinds.

Improving Back Yards.
In regard to improving back yards I know of a little instance where an Italian bought two dozen geraniums of me. Some time afterward his neighbor asked me if I was the one that had sold the geraniums. I told him I was, and he said: "I am not going to have that fellow beat me in his back yard. Give me four dozen geraniums."—A New Jersey Florist.

GRAVE TROUBLE FORESEEN.
It needs but little foresight, to tell that when your stomach and liver are badly affected, grave trouble is ahead, unless you take the proper medicine for your disease, as Mrs. John A. Young, of Clay, N. Y., did. She says: "I had neuralgia of the liver and stomach, my heart was weakened, and I could not eat. I was very bad for a long time, but in Electric Bitters, I found just what I needed, for they quickly relieved and cured me." Best medicine for weak women. Sold under guarantee by Benson's Pharmacy, drug list at 50c a bottle.
