THE INTELLIGENCER

The Patterns and Styles Ten Years Ago

When ten years ago on May 16th, the Intelligencer was first published, the city of Oregon was aglow with the first influence of spring. The young sprouts of new life were in full bloom, and the melodic bird songs could be heard from the south. The Intelligencer was born on a warm, sunny morning.

The Intelligencer, Oregon, May 16, 1920

Hurry Up! was a winner in the Westward Meet at Galveston, Texas, and is expected to be at the track in April.

Jack Higgins was in from Romer Monday, but was unable to attend the council meeting due to his ill health.

Mr. A. N. Jones does demolition work on the old Valentine's, Club, and is expected to get a new building for the young folks.

The council considered the transfer of the electric lighting contract to the Williams Valley Co., and asked that the matter be laid over for the next council meeting.

A petition was received asking the council to have the school board be responsible for the payment of the school board. It was decided to give the petition to the school board.

The notice on the city water system was published in the Intelligencer April, 1919.

The city is now in complete control of the school system, and all matters relating to this important work are being done on a large scale.
