CHAPTER XIV.

The Tent Cut Out with the Scissors, and the various tools and materials used in the making of it, were brought down by theaption, who, with a hale step and a heart full of pride, led a long line of redcoats, each of whom carried a bundle of wood, a sieve of coal, or a bag of flour. The tent was first set up by the Captain, who, with a firm hand and a steady eye, guided the soldiers in their work. He then ordered the men to remove the rims of the canvas and to stretch it over the framework. The work was done with great care and precision, and the tent was soon erected in the open ground. The soldiers then proceeded to make the fire, and to prepare the food. The evening was spent in friendly conversation, and the strains of martial music could be heard in the distance.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busily engaged in making the necessary repairs.

The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.

The next morning, the tent was found to be well and truly set up, and the soldiers were busy in making the necessary repairs. The weather was fine, and the air was fresh, and the men were in high spirits. The Captain gave the order to break camp, and the soldiers began to pack up their baggage. The tent was taken down with great care, and the soldiers were then ordered to make the fire, and to prepare the food.