BUSY BILL GREENE.

Adventurous Career of the Copper King of Mexico.

The man who owns the Cananea mines in Mexico, where the race war between Americans and Mexicans raged for several days, is known as plain Bill Greene in Arizona. New Yorkers call him Col. Greene, but his truthful blographers write of him as William C Greene and refer to him as president of the Greene Consolidated Copper Company. Few men have had careers as adventurous as his. The East was too slow for him as a youth, and he went cow punching beyond the Missourl. That proved to be a rather mild occupation in time, and so the dushing and wide awake youngster organized and led several voluntary expeditions against the Apaches. Greene has as

Each village is a little Venice, every house a little island, and these islets are connected by bridges sufficiently raised to allow boats to pass under them. Most of the houses, with their barns and stables, rest on piles, and there is generally a strip of artificial terra firma either in front or at the rear of every building. By means of these land strips and of the bridges the sleuder land communication is kept throughout the district, but most of the business and amusement are carried on through the canals, which not only form the main highways, but penetrate and cross and recross the whole region. It is on these lagoons that all traffic is conducted in boats during the period from spring when the last vestiges of frost and ice are disappearing until the end of autumn. You see the letter carrier shoot up and down the canals, performing his duties in his frail craft; the police glide leisurely along the banks, watching everything going on; peasants bring the products of their toll to the nearest towns; children go to and from school; young mothers. dressed in their Sunday clothes, are rowed to church, carrying in their arms a small, queer looking bundle from which two large eyes in a tiny face stare at the stranger in wondermentbaby is going to be baptized, an important moment with this strongly religious people.—Technical World Mag-very good in their way, but if there since were three of them how much better it would be. If man had an eye in the back of his head, as certain insects. have, he would never be run down, never be stubbed from behind, never be kicked. Man, with three eyes, could see and do twice as much as now.

The hair might well be improved. It is poor stuff alongside of feathers. Look at the beautiful feather headricher and brighter in hue than human hair, and they last. They don't disappear. No one ever saw a bald bird.

The ears are not at all perfect. As the eyes are provided with lids, so that we can shut them tight when we want to sleep, so the ears should be provided with movable flaps or stoppers wherewith to shut out sound.

If the teeth endured there would be little fault to find with them. But, like the hair, they fall man long before the end of life. Hence it would be better if, like some birds, men had indestructible teeth in their gizzards, and swal lowed their food whole, letting the gizzard grind it up gradually. This would not destroy the pleasure of eating. On the contrary, it would increase it. There would be nerves of taste in the gizzard. and thus the eating pleasure would be greatly prolonged. The food would be swallowed in a jiffy, and afterward, as man attended to his work, he would get for many hours pleasant tastes from the dainties the gizzard would be slowly and carefully grinding up.
