New Years Edition

We are pleased to announce to the people of Cottage Grove and surrounding country that we have the services of a specialist in getting out our annual special edition this year. It is our plan to get up an edition that will eclipse any effort of the kind ever attempted in this county. We will use a good grade of book paper which will bring out cut effects almost equal to photographs. Mr. Martin, who has had many years' experience in industrial write-up work, will write accurate descriptive articles on all our leading industries as well as the peculiar advantage offered by our town for the investor and homeseeker. The industrial articles will all be illustrated showing conditions as they are, which cannot but attract the attention of the large numbers of the large numbers who are looking with longing gaze toward our even climated valley.

The coming of the investor and the homeseeker will benefit all classes whether you are a farmer, millman, merchant or miner, and we earnestly invite your co-operation in our efforts to attract people this way.

Without effort nothing is accomplished. If we work hard enough, and work together we will realize our hopes.

The Eye and Its Care

DR. FRANC LUCILE HARD, EUGENE.

In our first article upon the eye and its care we will commence a brief description of the eye.

As we all know the eyeballs are situated in the front of the head in two hollow cavities called the orbits. The shape of these cavities is conical with the basis directed outward. The walls of the orbit are of solid bone and lined with various kinds of tissues and much fat which forms a soft bed for the eyeball to rest in.

In front, the eye is protected by the eyebrows, eyelids and eyelashes. The eyebrows help keep the dirt and dust from the eye and also regulate, to a small extent the amount of light which enters the eye. The eyelids are the shields of the eye. Those little shields play a very important part in protecting the eyeball. Their action being involuntary as well as voluntary. They close upon the slightest danger approaching the eye, thus avoiding many injuries to it. And in the act of winking the minute glands which line their inner surface are made to secrete the solution which keeps the front of the eye well moist and well lubricated. But perhaps the greatest use of the eyelid is to keep the light from the eyes when at rest. Think how pleasant it is to close the eyes and shut out all light and motion for a few moments, then imagine the calamity it would be to be unable to do this. The eyelashes are a double or triple row of short thick curved hairs on the edge of the eyelids. These assist greatly in keeping the dirt from the eyeball. Sometimes these tiny hairs grow in the wrong direction, toward the eye instead of away from it, and cause much trouble by scratching and irritating the outer coating of the eye. These then have to be removed so as to gain relief from the acute pain.

The above are the protectors of the eyeball. We will now talk about the rotators or the muscles of the eye. There are six of these attached to each eyeball: The Internal Rectus, pulling the eye toward the nose; the External, which pulls toward the temple; the Superior Rectus, pulling upward; and the Inferior Rectus, pulling downward.

There are also two muscles called Oblique muscles, named from their action of pulling the eye upward and downward and outward. Of these muscles the Internal Rectus is the strongest; the External Rectus, the longest and the Inferior Rectus the shortest.

In this article the appendages of the eye have been described. Next week the eyeball will be taken up.

High School Notes.

The Sophomores have taken up the study of the "Hills of the King" by Tennyson, as a classic, in connection with their Rhetoric work; and the Freshmen are studying "The Courtship of Miles Standish by Longfellow, along with their English.

Miss Mary Sproule met with the misfortune of being robbed of some valuable jewelry. Tramps entered the house during her absence at school and appropriated to themselves what they thought might be of any use.

The Ladies of the Civic Improvement Committee have endeavored to beautify the school grounds by planting a hedge in front of the school house. They expect to replace the tulip bed later on. This will greatly improve the appearance of the grounds and much interest was shown by the High School last Friday evening in assisting with the work.

The Freshmen class is still increasing in number, as another student has been added to the class, making the number enrolled twenty seven.

Last week the East Side school had their first fire drill of the year.

Commenced Sawing Friday.

The Coast Fork Timber Co. commenced sawing on Friday and readily got out over 11,000 feet of lumber that day, although greatly handicapped, while waiting for lumber for a floor for the mill. A crew of carpenters are at work now cutting the timber for the rafters and will commence this week getting the roof on. Mr. Anderson expects to have the mill entirely completed within three weeks, and cutting all the lumber they can get down the river to it, as the mill is cutting far more lumber than they had planned for. Mr. Anderson is wondering now what he is going to do with such an accumulation of slabs as is coming.

Saloon Slavery

BY FRANK ALEXANDER CROW BUFFALO, N. Y.

Saloon slavery has its origin in the selfishness of men. Greed for gold is the soul of this infamous trade. It is a despotism. Three hundred thousand liquor venders in this county live by the degradation and suffering of others. Two millions of drunkards are staggering toward dishonored graves. A hundred thousand die each year and an equal number must be recruited from the ranks of American manhood to keep the business running.

The saloon cannot live without making slaves. Whose blood has not been chilled to see the agonizing efforts of the saloon slaves to regain their liberty?

It grows by toleration, legalization and license. It dominates politics and runs riot everywhere.

By high license, local option, Sunday-closing and other restrictive features, this evil is being curtailed until an awakened conscience demands its abolition.

Officers who fearlessly execute the laws are sometimes powerless to do so, because of the defiant attitude and ingenious ways of the liquor element. The saloon and gambling make desperate efforts to break down all law and order and too often succeed. Awakened public sentiment is demanding the enforcement of all existing laws and that stronger ones be enacted. The churches are being federated and all temperance organizations mobilized into one great army called the "Anti-Saloon League."

It is most significant in its omni-partisan and non-sectarian aspects. Its object is to create public sentiment, enforce existing laws, avert improper legislation and secure good enactments.

Local option is now the slogan in this great state. Majority rule is the principle on which it stands. This is fundamental to our nation. The advocates of this measure are denounced as "cranks," "fanatics," etc. It is quite possible that those who think that they are so very wise in this matter may find themselves much ajar with the coming trend of affairs.

There are six well-defined reasons why the Local Option Bill should remain.

1. Any business that creates crime, disease and pauperism should not be thrust upon any locality without its consent.

2. The proposition is in strict accordance with the fundamental idea that each locality is the best judge of its own local conditions.

3. It does not ask the legislature to close a single saloon, but merely to hand the question back for determination by a majority of the voters of the locality concerned, and will affect principally the brewery-established saloon, which exists not to supply a demand, but to create one. It is neither radical nor startling. It is in harmony with recognized, judicially established principles governing the liquor traffic.

4. It will protect real estate values as well as morals. Will make the police force more effective by restricting the saloon area.

5. The brewers and liquor interests say that it is the most dangerous piece of legislation regarding their business that has been proposed. They are using their utmost endeavors to defeat the bill.

6. It is nothing more or less than a righteous home-rule proposition. It offers the temperance people a chance to help themselves. The evils of the saloon force the issue, and only by united action can we hope to win.

The temperance tide is rising everywhere. Public sentiment is being crystallized. The young are being educated. The work broadens and in a little while few will drink and the breweries and the distilleries will go out of business. This sounds Utopian! Yes, but wait and see!—Ex.

Honey Has Worked Hands at San Francisco

The prosecution of graft in San Francisco seems to now be in the hands of Henry, as assistant to District Attorney Langdon, and Ruef is out of it, in spite of the attempt of the Acting Mayor G. Blagden to depose Langdon and install Ruef. The conditions at San Francisco are the worst ever known and startling things are expected of the Grand Jury.

Black Percheron Stallion Exhibited.

J. Stern, representative of the importing firm of S. Mertz & Sons, of Homewood, Illinois is in the Grove with as fine a black Percheron stallion as has ever been seen here. The horse is one of 72 imported from France and is of high pedigree. Mr. Stern has the French and American pedigree of the animal. The horse is three years old and weighs nearly 1800 pounds, and is a superb animal. We hope that the farmers may be able to secure this horse, as with such a stallion they will be able to raise a class of horses as fine as any in the country. The horse is on exhibition at the Fashion Levee Stables.

Tramway Catches Man.

Fred Ryan, a man employed by the Oregon Securities Co. was injured by being run over by an empty train car on the cable train between the Oregon Securities and the tunnel a week ago Wednesday. A car was coming down when a car was sent up the slope without signal and several men on the track were scattered around. Ryan was caught by the car and dragged by his right foot and leg for almost 75 feet and narrowly escaped death by being crunched between the cars coming down and the ones going up, by pulling himself around the end of the car. His injuries have proved to not have been serious and while he is still on crutches, he will soon be brought.
