THE IRON PIRATE
A Plain Tale of Strange Happenings on the Sea

BY MAX PUMBERTON

CHAPTER VI

We steered back to London. When I got to bed that night the image of that little Mowbray woman was before me, and I felt that the story of her experiences had left me poorer. The next day I found out by the newspapers that there had been a sensation in London at the sudden death of that little Mowbray woman, and that it had been discovered that she had murdered an elderly lady. I must admit that I was not surprised at this, for the newspapers had said that she had murdered an elderly lady, and I knew that she had murdered an elderly lady. But it was a great shock to me to hear that she had murdered an elderly lady. I had always thought that she was a harmless old lady, and I had never suspected that she was capable of such a deed. But it is true that she was capable of such a deed, and I should have known it if I had been more careful. I should have known that she was capable of such a deed, and I should have been more careful if I had been more careful.

CHAPTER VII

I was astonished to hear that she had murdered an elderly lady, and I was even more surprised to hear that she had murdered an elderly lady. I had always thought that she was a harmless old lady, and I had never suspected that she was capable of such a deed. But it is true that she was capable of such a deed, and I should have known it if I had been more careful. I should have known that she was capable of such a deed, and I should have been more careful if I had been more careful.

CHAPTER VIII

I was astonished to hear that she had murdered an elderly lady, and I was even more surprised to hear that she had murdered an elderly lady. I had always thought that she was a harmless old lady, and I had never suspected that she was capable of such a deed. But it is true that she was capable of such a deed, and I should have known it if I had been more careful. I should have known that she was capable of such a deed, and I should have been more careful if I had been more careful.