NEWS OF THE WEEK
In a Condensed Form for Our Busy Readers.
A Resume of the Less Important but Noteworthy Events of the Past Week.
The voluntary term has been expiring, and none has been renewed. French troops have occupied the states of Wyoming, Nebraska, and the Dakotas. The principal object, however, is to magnify the power of the United States. The legal control of the states in the present form is not intended to last, for the states are in no condition to defend themselves against the law. The treaty of peace is signed, and the states are now at peace with the government. The question of the national policy is still under consideration. In the offices of the Deseret Post, New York, April 10—J. F. J. S. Smith, publisher of the Deseret Post in Salt Lake City, said:

"The Deseret Post was first published in Salt Lake City, on April 10, 1850. It was the first weekly newspaper in the Territory of Utah. The Deseret Post was founded by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to serve as a vehicle for dissemination of information and instruction to the Latter-day Saint community. The newspaper was named after the Book of Mormon, which contains the account of the Deseret people, an ancient people who lived in the Americas.

The Deseret Post was initially operated by the Church itself, and its editors were appointed by the Church President. The newspaper faced numerous challenges during its early years, including limited circulation and financial hardship. However, it played a crucial role in spreading knowledge and promoting the values and beliefs of the Church.

The Deseret Post continued to publish until 1970, when it was merged with another newspaper to form the Deseret News. The Deseret News continues to serve as the official newspaper of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Joseph Smith, the founder of the Church, had a vision in 1830 that led to the establishment of the Church and the publication of the Deseret Post. The vision, which was recorded in the Book of Mormon, was that the Church would "be a light unto the Gentiles." The Deseret Post was seen as a tool to fulfill that vision, providing information and guidance to the Church members and the wider community.

The Deseret Post was not only a source of news for the local community but also played a significant role in the wider context of American journalism. It was one of the earliest newspapers to be published in the territory of Utah, and it helped to establish a local reading public and a sense of community among the settlers.

The Deseret Post's influence extended beyond its readership. It was a source of inspiration and encouragement for other newspapers that were established in the territory. It helped to establish the tradition of local newspapers as a means of disseminating information and promoting community values.

Over time, the Deseret Post adapted to the changing needs of its readership. It evolved from a strictly religious publication to one that covered a wider range of topics, including local news, business, and entertainment.

Despite its challenges, the Deseret Post remained a vital part of the community for over 120 years. It served as a source of information, a platform for discussion, and a reflection of the values and aspirations of the Latter-day Saint community. Its legacy continues to be felt today through the ongoing work of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and the Deseret News.

In conclusion, the Deseret Post was a significant milestone in the history of journalism in the United States. It played a vital role in the development of the Mormon community and contributed to the advancement of journalism as a whole. Its legacy continues to be remembered and celebrated, serving as a testament to the enduring spirit of innovation and community.
