Washington, April 11-A bill introduced Tuesday to the House in which provision is made to extend the coal loan is expected to be acted on by the Senate this afternoon. The extension of the loan is expected to be voted on by the Senate this afternoon. The extension of the loan is expected to be voted on by the Senate this afternoon.

The bill, which was introduced by Representative John W. Rankin, D-Miss., provides for a loan of $20 million to the Harriman Coal Company, one of the leading coal companies in the country.

The company is reported to have been in financial difficulties in recent months due to a combination of factors including falling coal prices, increased production costs, and a decline in sales. The loan is intended to help the company weather these challenges and continue its operations.

The bill was met with some opposition, with some members of Congress expressing concerns about the potential impact of the loan on the coal industry and the economy as a whole. However, the Harriman Coal Company has been a valued contributor to the industry and its support is expected to be widespread.

The loan is expected to be voted on by the Senate this afternoon. If approved, it will likely be passed by the House and signed into law by the President.

Advantages of the Loan

The Harriman Coal Company has been in operation for over 100 years and is known for its high quality products and reliable services. The company has been a leader in the coal industry and its contributions have been instrumental in its domination of the market.

With this loan, the company will be able to continue its domestic production and expand its operations in other markets. This will not only benefit the company but also support the local economy and provide employment opportunities for many Americans.

In conclusion, the Harriman Coal Company is a valuable asset to the economy and its support should be encouraged.

President. The advantages of this loan are clear, and it represents a wise investment in the future of the coal industry.
