Will Not be Aired in the Courts.

A mutual agreement to separate has been arrived at in the families of Messrs. Hall, Compton, Eakin and Wheeler so that the matter will not have to be aired in the courts. On Monday last the ladies packed their baggage and with their children left for Disston where they will go into camp and try to thoroughly enjoy themselves a la picnic during the time the separation from their lords last. It is understood that the compromise included the permission for the now forlorn bachelors to visit their better halves at least once a week, or more if they felt contrite enough. It was not a sad separation by any means, each one looking forward to a delightful time, but from experience we predict that the men will be the first to eat humble pie.

The ladies appointed a committee of three consisting of Mesdames B. R. Job, C. P. Oregon State Fair.

goats. Altogether there is an area of almost two and one-half acres under roof. There are 698 stalls, and 342 pens, making a total of 1040 apartments for the accommodation of livestock exhibitors.

In the horse barns there are a great many box stalls. Two out of the three cattle buildings are double barns, having passageways between the heads of the animals—a great improvement over former conditions, where the visitor was compelled to walk behind the animals, the point of view being far from advantageous and the danger of soiling the clothes imminent. In the swine department one pleasing feature is the judging arena in the center of the building. By a system of gates and runways every pen can be connected with this arena, and all danger of escape is eliminated. Formerly it was necessary to take the animal out of the pen, and frequently the captive broke away and caused a lively chase around the grounds.

The old stand for the judging of stock which served its purpose well but which in the new order of things would be useless, has been built into the goat barn. The poultry building has been turned half way around, to face the main walk to the livestock department. It will also be enlarged and remodeled. Thus the dairy building, poultry building and livestock barns, which would naturally be visited together, are all in convenient and uniform positions.

These are only a few of the changes taking place at the Fair grounds. Minor improvements are being made everywhere. To get a complete idea of what Oregon's great fair will be the reader must visit the grounds for himself. Why not attend the fair, September 16, to 21? It is an education in itself.
