

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Ambassador to Japan.
 Luke E. Wright of Tennessee, governor general of the Philippines since 1903, who has been appointed ambassador to Japan, will be the first representative of Uncle Sam to bear that rank at the court of the Mikado. The rise from legation to embassy follows similar action on the part of Japan. Ambassador Wright went to the Philippines in 1900 as a member of the second Philippine commission and in 1901 was made vice governor general when civil government was established.

ed in the islands. He had much to do with putting the new government in successful operation. He acted as governor during the absence of Governor General Taft and succeeded him when Mr. Taft became secretary of war in President Roosevelt's cabinet. Mr. Wright is a lawyer by profession, a Democrat in politics and is fifty-nine years old.

Commissioner Henry C. Ide, who succeeds Mr. Wright as governor of the Philippines, has been a commissioner to the islands for six years. He will retire June 1, when James F. Smith of California, now a member of the Philippine commission, will become governor.

Family Resemblance.

"You look so much like a Sunday school teacher I had in Ohio when I was a boy that I want to call you Dear-dorf," said an acquaintance to Representative McCrenry of Philadelphia several days ago.

"Dear-dorf was my mother's name, and I believe I look more like her than like my father," answered the Philadelphia.

Further inquiry developed the fact that the Sunday school teacher was a second cousin of the representative.

"That's no more wonderful than what I did in a Methodist conference held at Salt Lake City a number of years ago," said Representative Dale of Scranton, who was a member of the party. "I had heard before I got to Salt Lake City that there was a Dale in the conference. I saw a man who I thought looked like a Dale. Sure enough, he was. I picked him out on the first guess."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Our Moroccan Envoy.

Samuel R. Gummere, American minister to Morocco and one of the delegates to the convention at Algiers, is much impressed with the undeveloped wealth of that country and the opportunity it affords for American enterprise.

Mr. Gummere reports that the soil need only be scratched to produce each year two abundant crops of corn, barley and vegetables. American agricultural machinery, according to Mr. Gummere, is greatly needed in Morocco, as the primitive wooden plow is still used there. Moreover, Morocco needs railroads, telegraphs, electricity and a hundred other conveniences which it could have if the country were opened, but against these things the Moors hitherto have resolutely set their faces.

He says that although a considerable quantity of American flour, petroleum and lard is imported it is brought through Marseilles, Hamburg and other European ports upon European ships and is distributed by European traders. Nine-tenths of the flour imported is American.

Much of the Moroccan market, Mr. Gummere thinks, could be occupied by American merchants if a direct steamship line were established.

AN UNLUCKY MINE

"There's gold there, stranger, but you're a bolder man than I am if you strike a pick in Truefitt's claim."

"Why so?"
 "There's bad luck goes with it, and I wouldn't see any chap take hold of the thing with his eyes shut."
 "It began before I came with young Gale Truefitt, who staked out the claim."

"He was a good natured sort, always doing a kind turn to strangers that came into camp and getting little or no thanks for it."

"Well, he picked up a partner out of the lot, a smooth talking chap, who had a desperate bad streak in him, for he knocked Truefitt over the head one night after they had been working six months together and ran away, taking their pile."

"Gale had a tough head, and it carried him through. He got to work again, but it was in a downhearted way, and by and by he confessed that there was a girl waiting for him whom he had promised to go back to inside of a year, and his time was almost up."

"Well, you'd have thought the luck was on his side when he struck a nugget that went a great way toward making up the pile he had lost."

"He started out of the camp as happy as a king and halfway to Denver was stopped by robbers and cleaned of his last bit."

"Didn't seem as if he had any heart left to begin again, and the last that was heard of him he was doing odd jobs about town. The claim didn't bring him a cent, but the next man that took hold of it got into a squabble before he had it a week and was shot dead. Of the next two one got mountain fever and died and the other turned out a horse thief, who was followed up and made to stretch hemp in the end."

"There's been a dozen who have tried it, and not one of them got off scot free."

"One chap had his leg broken by a cave-in, another got the blue devils after him and took poison, and the last one made his pile twice over and lost it both times card playing."

"And died?" asked the stranger.

"Well, no," rather reluctantly, "but he saw the folly of it and quit in time and there's no telling what may happen to him yet. Take my word for it, stranger, no good will come if you take up Truefitt's claim."

But the stranger was either not impressed by the list of calamities which had overtaken his predecessors or he cared little whether good or ill followed upon his efforts.

Truefitt's claim turned out well in his hands, yet it was evident that he cared little for the rich yellow dust.

For days together he would not put in a stroke of work.

At such seasons he was usually away with his gun, tramping among the hills, courting fatigue and hardship, for which the game he secured was a most inadequate return.

These expeditions grew longer and longer, and at last one day the miners were started to see a new face looking at them from Truefitt's claim.

It was the dark, haggard face of a man who had been hanging about the place for a week, taking silent notes and making sly inquiries where he could without drawing special attention to himself.

The miners looked at each other in half awed questioning, but no, the well known figure of their comrade stalked into the place as they wondered and confronted the interloper.

"What might you be doing here, mister?"

"Jumped you. Your time's up this morning, according to what these gents say."

It was true. Grown careless in his security of possession, he had forfeited his rights, but a warning cloud passed over his bearded face.

"I reckon you know the story of this here claim, stranger?" he remarked quietly. "It's a good time for you and me to see how much truth there is in it for us."

"I haven't come here to make trouble," the new claimant protested, "but if there's any one among you was here five years ago you'll know that I am Gale Truefitt himself. Don't that sort of give me a right, seeing that this chap's out fair and square of his own doing?"

"You are Gale Truefitt?"

What was it in the other's tone that made the claimant of the name turn pale?

"I've a wife and a little child starving down in Denver. I've been in hard luck, and it was my last chance coming up here to work for them. I'm not a coward, only for their sakes, but if I go under they haven't a friend left in this world."

"Liar!" came from between the set lips of his adversary. "Friends, Judge between us. I am Gale Truefitt. This is the rascal who robbed me first of my gold, afterward of the girl who was to be my wife—robbed me of her and left her when he got tired of a respectable life."

"I found her down in Denver six months ago—too late to save her—and the little one had gone before. I've had the hate of him burning in my heart ever since. It's given me no rest, but I didn't hunt him up for revenge. I tried to beat the feeling down and to work it off, but it's no use—we can't both live."

While he spoke the hand of the other went furtively to his pocket, but Truefitt detected the movement.

His own weapon was drawn on the instant. There was a dull report and a double fall.

Truefitt's claim was once more ownerless.—Boston Globe.

The Only Way.

"Do you ever manage to get the last word when you're quarreling with your wife?"

"Yes. I call her up on the phone, say it and ring off."—Cleveland Leader.

City Council.

The Council met in regular monthly session on Monday night and established the following rates for irrigation during the summer months from the city water mains. Hours water can be used for irrigation purposes, 6:30 p. m. to 8 p. m.

Rate where family is using city water for domestic purposes, 75 cents per month additional, to regular rate.

Rate where city water is used only for irrigation purposes $1 per month.

Water for stock 25 cents per head per month.

W. C. Conner and G. O. McGillvray representing the citizens who own property on the south side of Wall street from the Silk Creek bridge to Knowlton's barn came before the council asking that the council make the necessary arrangements for the city to vacate its right to a strip of ground along the south side of Wall street for that distance, where the street is crooked, and is in excess of 60 feet in width, the uniform width of the remainder of the street, in order to make the entire street of a uniform width, and so that sidewalks, telephone lines, hydrants, fences and all will be set on a definite line. As any vacated property reverts to the original owners the property owners agreed to settle the ownership of the ground among themselves, and to bring the land to grade. With this agreement the city voted to vacate a strip of ground 10 to 15 feet wide and 2240 feet long, along the south side of Wall street to the property owners.

The finance committee approved the bills for the month and the council ordered them paid as follows:

School Election Draws Near.

June 28th is the date for the Annual School election. The retiring director this year is Oliver Veatch who has been chairman of the board and who has served faithfully for many years. A number of people who have felt that Mr. Veatch through his years of service and knowing that he has made the work a study, and is thoroughly posted on school law, and the best manner of handling the school work, have asked Mr. Veatch, in the following petition to be a candidate for re-election.

Cottage Grove, Ore., June 4, '06. Oliver Veatch:

We, the undersigned, legal voters of School District No. 45, Cottage Grove, Oregon, request that you allow your name to be placed before the voters of said school district as a candidate for re-election to the office of director of said school district at the coming election June 18th, 1906, hereby pledging you our loyal support.

James W. Sears, J. W. Currie, J. S. Benson, B. F. Skillman, J. M. Fisher, S. B. Morss, R. C. Grace, J. B. Lewis, F. D. Wheeler, F. B. Phillips.

Ladies Band Elects Officers

The new band elected its officers on Monday night and set next Tuesday to order their instruments, which will be bass and snare drums, baritone horn, alto, four cornets, two trombones, a B flat and a tuba. The officers are pres. Mrs. Lorena Martin, vice-president Miss Gertrude Palmer, Sec. Miss Dollie Hawkins, treasurer, Miss Dessie Harms, librarian Miss Daisy Hawkins, manager Miss Ethel Cottle, director Mr. Chas. Cochran.

The School of mines boys were royally welcomed at all the mines in the camp which they visited last week, and every place every courtesy was offered them. The boys are a bright set and will add to the good mining men in the state.

Richard Canfield, the great New York gambler has purchased a home in New York only a couple of doors from E. H. Harriman's residence. Society seems to be stirred up about it, but seeing that so many of the men give their money to Canfield, why not close at home, as well as have to go down town.

Geo. Rouse and wife, who have been keeping the Mineral hotel of the Golden Rule Mining & Milling Co. during the winter have returned to town, and Geo. Keizer and wife, who ran the hotel before the Rouse have returned and will take care of it during the summer. The hotel is at the Golden Rule Co's property at the foot of the hill going up to Bohemia and is a favorite stopping place.

Mr. Calvin Fleming, one of the largest dealers in lumber of Denver, Colorado, spent some time visiting sawmill men in the vicinity of Cottage Grove last week. Mr. Fleming placed orders with the Chambers Lumber Co. for several cars of material and departed for the north Saturday morning. It was found without exception all the mills both large and small had orders far ahead for their entire output of lumber, and it is plain to see that the importance of Cottage Grove is a milling and shipping center.

You cannot induce a lower animal to eat heartily when not feeling well. A sick dog starves himself and gets well. The stomach, once overworked must have rest the same as your feet or eyes. You don't have to starve to rest your stomach. Kodol for Dyspepsia takes up the work for your stomach, digests what you eat and gives it a rest. Puts it back in condition again. You can't feel good with a disordered stomach. Try Kodol. Sold by Benson's Pharmacy.
