Circuit Court in Session.

Judge Harris held a short session of circuit court Tuesday to listen to arguments in the case of Edward A. Krumm vs. Adelbert C. Miller, et al. M. E. Buley & Co. demurred to the further and separate reply and counter-claim of defendants Miller, stating as reasons that the court was a court of equity and had no jurisdiction, and further that the counter-claim does not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense in the case.

County Court in Session.

The county commissioner met in a regular session Tuesday and have a large list of business before them. They will probably not be able to finish it up for the next ten days or two weeks. There is much business in re-arranging the boundaries of road districts, receiving reports of overseers, selecting the jury for the coming year, passing bills and a large amount of other business. It is one of the most important sessions of the year.

Blessings in Disguise.

Rain, rain. The topic of the hour. Our blessings do not always come in a form to be appreciated by us at the time, but the abundant crops that will be ours next summer because of our present down-pour will be enjoyed by all of us. We may complain and think we could improve things, if we had the power, but in the end all comes right and we forget the inconveniences in the enjoyment of the conditions produced by them.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 24, 1906. "Merry Christmas!" Why, certainly. Congress has adjourned for the holidays: That is enough to make the average Washingtonian happy. When congress has adjourned for the summer, the desire is for the commencement of the new session, and when the first Monday in Monday in December arrives there is as much skittishness among residents of the capitol city as among the trust magnates.

Representative Lacey of Iowa "Put it to them straight" a few days before adjournment for the Xmas holidays in holidays in regard to reckless waste of time at the beginning of a session and the pushing through of objectionable legislation at the end of the winter's work. And in fact he spoke truer than many suppose. In the wee sma' hours of the night when congress is giving a continuous performance there is ample opportunity for amendments to be tacked onto bills put on their passage, and credence is given to statements that this actually occurs. Frequently during the closing hours there will be but a handful of members in either chamber, and there is understood to have been numerous tricks played in the past to get a member known to be antagonistic to a certain measure to go to a committee room "to see a man" while the deal is consummated. But do not think for a moment that all members are negligent to the interests of the country and their constituents. The vast majority of congressmen and senators are hard-working men, and devote their time exclusively while in Washington to the purposes for which they were elected. A large number have taken advantage of the Christmas holidays to return to their districts to get in touch with the desires of their constituents, for he it known that a member of congress can not always follow the advice freely given in letters and telegrams from their home districts. Campaigning is becoming such a common art that whenever a politician, business man, or trade organization wants anything in the line of a favor recourse is had to a printing press and a circular letter sent to everyone within hailing distance asking that a letter or telegram be sent insisting on a certain action.

Is the western atmosphere conducive to activity. That inference might be given by the actions of Representatives Groma and Marshall, of North Dakota. The latter is spending his holidays trying to find a solution of the car-shortage which is at a critical stage in that state. Representative A. J. Grooms in addition to stirring up the executive branches of the government through a letter to the car-shortage question, also started the agitation which resulted in a modification of the coal-lands entry decision. Through a misunderstanding coal lands were withdrawn from entry in any manner, when the President had intended to withdraw it from coal land entry only. The lands in North Dakota affected by the modified order comprise 1,774,080 acres.

Among a party of congressmen and senators visiting the Panama canal during the holiday recess is Representative J. R. Knowland of California. Before leaving for the Isthmus Mr. Knowland said: "The laboring people of California particularly are opposed to the hiring of coolie labor in the construction of the canal, and we Californians who are going down to see the conditions for ourselves feel that we will be in a better position to act more intelligently upon this subject. But little heed is given in Washington to the 'demands' of some organizations that the canal be dug with American labor. When there is a demand throughout the country that labor of any kind can not be obtained, and when street improvements and building operations in the city of Washington are tied up for months by the lack of labor of every kind, not much attention is given to demands builded on a supposition of conditions only consistent with a fervid imagination. Senator Foraker appears to have the best of the argument so far in the contention regarding the colored troops discharged from the army because they did not turn detectives and ferret out those guilty of disorderly conduct in inciting a small riot at Brownsville, Tex. A quiet smile is going the rounds that the senate should be told that all the evidence was transmitted to them and that it was sufficient to warrant the action taken, and then a back-down should be exhibited to the extent of sending another inquisitor to the scene of action for "more evidence." Time alone will tell whether "more evidence" means evidence to bolster the position taken or an endeavor taken or an endeavor to ascertain the truth. It is the usual thing for subordinates in Washington to look at the world through the eyeglasses of their superiors, and the inference is obvious.

The proposition of Representative DeArmond of Missouri that a convention be held to consider amendments to the constitution is attracting considerable attention, particularly as it comes from a democrat. The loudest "holler" has come from the democrats that the constitution was being ignored, and that the traditions of Jefferson et al., should be preserved.

Another innovation is proposed by Representative Crumpacker of Indiana that appeals should be allowed from "fraud orders" imposed by the postoffice department. Although it is acknowledged that there should be more fraud orders issued, instead of less, there is some resentment that the department should be the court of last resort. As the men selected for the positions of inspectors and detectives to run down evidences of fraud are close friends of the appointing power, there is ample opportunity for "monkey business" of a particularly vicious sort.

Who is congressman W. B. McKinley of Ohio? Has he a "bee in his bonnet?" An elaborate banquet was given last week for the gentleman from Ohio, and the comment lead one to suppose that there is a new candidate in the field for higher honors. The fetion of a name is of some consequence in Washington, and the connection of a famous name with any enterprise assures its success.

It is to laugh when reference is made in the dispatches of the efforts of the "State of South Carolina" to procure labor in the old world to "run her factories." Any business man knows that the state does not pay very much attention to the private affairs of the people. If you will imagine, if you please, that some enterprising labor agency has connected with the powers that be in the state to give a percentage of the profits for the pretense of state importation of labor, to be turned over to the private corporation, and thereby avoid the disagreeable encounters with the federal government incident to importing contract labor, you will see through the game. And this in the year nineteen hundred and six.

Should congress be compelled to attend every daily session of the house and senate? This question is ever recurring, and probably will be like the poor. Always with us. In the first place, the system builded by past legislators is conducive to rapid, clean legislation, and is whipped into shape by the various committees. Practically nothing said on the floor affects the action of the legislators for no matter how bitterly a matter is attacked it goes through according to the original plans. Spread-eagle speeches on the floor are for the purpose of influencing votes at the next election, and not for the purpose of changing legislation. Another thing those members of congress are fond of silver-tongued speeches are not, as a rule, on important committees; at least not at their head. A slip-tongued individual is not usually a deep thinker and the result is that the men who seldom appear in the Record are the ones who do the work.

Third Assistant Postmaster General Madden's proposition for a one-cent letter rate for local delivery should pass. The main principles of postal delivery are now in working shape, and unless some new matter is taken up the department could run itself. In fact, that condition exists in all the government departments to a large extent. Clerical nonentities are not allowed to deviate from the set rules and practices builded by years of political management. Many of these methods are entirely unnecessary and expensive, but the idea prevails that "what was must be."

THE EYE AND ITS CARE

By Dr. Franc Lucile Hard, Rooms 1-4 Chrisman Building, Eugene.

- 1—Cornea 6—Vitreous humor
2—Aqueous humor 7—Optic nerve
3—Pupil 8—Retina
4—Iris 9—Choroid
5—Crystalline lens 10—Sclerotic

In our first article upon the eye and its care we will commence a brief description of the anatomy of the eye.

As we all know the eye-balls are situated in the front of the head in two hollow cavities, called the orbits, the shape of these cavities is conical with the bases directed outward. The walls of the orbits are made of bone and lined with various tissue and much fat which forms a soft bed for the eye-ball to rest in.

In front the eye is protected by the eye-brow, eye-lids, and eye-lashes.

The eye-brows help keep the dust and dirt from the eye and, also regulate to a small extent the amount of light that enters the eye.

The eye-lids are the shields of the eye. These little shields play a very important part in protecting the eye-ball. Their action being involuntary as well as voluntary. They close upon approach of the least danger to the eye. And in the act of winking the little glands which line their inner surface are made to secrete the solution which keeps the front of the eye moist and well lubricated. But perhaps the greatest use of the eye-lids is to keep the light from the eyes when at rest. Think what it is to close the eyes and shut out all light and motion for a few moments, then, think what a calamity it would be to be unable to do this.

The eye-lashes help greatly in keeping the dust from entering the eye. Sometimes these tiny hairs grow in the wrong direction and cause much trouble by scratching and irritating the outer coating of the eye-ball, which we will tell about in one of the following articles. These ingrowing lashes then have to be removed as fast as they grow in. Thus giving relief from the pain. But this should only be done by one who is skillful at such work as the eye-lid is very tender and is apt to be torn unless great care is taken in removing the offending lashes.

The above are the protectors of the eye-ball. We will now talk about the rotators of muscles of the eye-ball.

There were six of these attached to each eye-ball; the Internal Rectus which pulls the eye toward the nose, the External Rectus which pulls the eye toward the temple, the Superior Rectus pulling upward, and the Inferior Rectus pulling downward. There are two muscles called the Oblique muscles, named from their action of pulling the eye upward and inward; and outward and downward.

Of these muscles the Internal Rectus is the strongest, the External Rectus the longest, and the Inferior Rectus the shortest.

This week the appendages of the eye have been taken up, next week the eye-ball itself will be described.

A FAIR FOR BOYS AND GIRLS TOO

Dr. Wallace R. Struble Proposes Plan for Unique Feature for Alaska Yukon-Pacific Exposition.

Special Correspondence: Seattle, Dec. 21, Dr. Wallace R. Struble, organizer for the anti-cigarette league, has proposed to the management of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, a plan for an unique feature for the exposition of 1909. Dr. Struble suggests that the boys and girls of America be given an opportunity to hold a fair of their own, to be part of the big fair, which will be held especially for grown-ups, although it may be made interesting to young people as well.

In a letter addressed to Henry E. Reed, director of exploitation, outlining his scheme, Dr. Struble says: "I respectfully submit herewith a tentative outline for a junior section of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, which I feel strongly impressed, would be a valuable feature both from an educational and sociological standpoint.

"I propose a junior department of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, with grounds especially set apart for its use, the buildings and landscape of which shall be prepared and furnished by boys and girls; the whole to be under a junior board of control, with boy and girl commissioners, secretaries, superintendent, etc., in short a miniature exposition setting forth the genius, education and varied talents of the young people of the Pacific.

"The grounds and buildings of this junior section, during the exposition period of 1909, should be under direction of the above-named board, aided by a junior municipal government, with mayor, alderman, juvenile court, policemen (elected possibly by popular vote of boys and girls)—the entire activities, of course, both during the construction and exhibition, to be under the oversight of a special adult committee.

"I would suggest the setting apart of a comparatively level piece of ground, two or three acres in extent, fenced or not, one side of which should be furnished as a playground, with separate department for boys and girls, equipped with recreation apparatus and laboratories, the remainder of the tract to be used for buildings, shrubs and flowers, and landscape effects.

"Let there be one exposition building proper to be used for the display of exhibits to be provided exclusively by boys and girls. I would suggest also a junior city hall—and a junior State of Washington building. The buildings mentioned could be constructed, I believe, by the boys of the manual training and industrial schools of the State of Washington, selected with regard to their known fitness, aided perhaps by boys from some of the neighboring states, and the actual work of construction could be done during the vacation months of 1907-1908."

Dr. Struble's plan will receive the serious attention of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition management, and if investigation proves that it is practicable, will be adopted. The scheme has the advantage of novelty, no earlier exposition having had a junior department. The exposition of 1909 will seem with novel features.
