HINTS FOR FARMERS

Clover In Northern Climates. It was found at the North Dakota experiment station that seeding clover or clover and timothy with a grain drill gives much greater assurance of a stand than broadcasting. With one exception during nine years, medium exception during nine years, medium red clover seeded with a nurse crop passed through the first winter without killing out. Allowing the second Mrs. C. W. Wallace, Rec. growth to remain as a winter protection gave good results in preventing winter killing and re-enforcing the stand by means of the new seed. It was observed that the average stubble field was in most seasons efficient as a winter protection. Inspection after each of eleven winter seasons did not reveal a case of heaving by frost. Where an ice sheet covered the plants, however, the clovers, alfalfa, timothy and redtop were killed out, while brome grass and the weed quack grass had withstood this adverse condition.

The fattening of hogs on apples may be considered a successful method, it being certain that this fruit posse a value for that purpose that has been overlooked, and the destruction of insects by hogs in consuming the fallen apples has given a new value to or-chards. The animals should be allowed in the orchard from the time the fruit begins to fall until it is time to gather apples for the winter, and they will in most cases be found in good condition for conversion into pork. When it is necessary to put them into the pen, boiled apples mixed with small quantities of corn, oats, peas or buckwheat meal will make them lard well and fill the farmer's barrel with sound, sweet pork of the first quality. -Philadelphia Record.
