The team, which is very gentle, was feeding on grass on an open lot and the little girls were placed on their backs while the horses were grazing about with only halters on. Finally when the horses had all the green feed they wanted they started off at a lively pace for the barn, the little girls holding on with all their might. Upon reaching the barn the horses turned suddenly into the door throwing both children off to one side. Mr. DuBrulle's little daughter escaped injury, but Verna, the daughter of Mr. Tullar struck the solid ground on the side of her face, knocked out two teeth and was rendered unconscious. However, it was found that she was only severely shaken up, and by Thursday she was able to be about again.
