EXCELLENT ARTICLE ON POULTRY RAISING

(By Prof. James Dryden of O. A. C.)

The question as to which is the most profitable breed of fowls, is very frequently asked. There are undoubtedly differences in breeds but undo importance should not be placed upon breed. The trap nest has shown that there is more difference in individuals than in breeds. Breed isn't everything. We must get away from that idea in poultry-keeping. If a man starts in the poultry business with the "best breed," as he believes, and has with it the notion that breed is everything he will meet with inevitable failure. The breed may be alright but the fowls must be encouraged to do their best by good care and management. When eggs are firm at 40 cents a dozen and the hens fail to respond the owner is likely to become unreasonable and take up with another breed and most likely the fault was not in the breed. The fault is usually one of two things: either the hens are of a poor or non-productive strain of the breed, or the management is poor.

It is a point in management that I wish to speak of here, one point in many that must be taken into account, if poultry-keeping is to be made a success. It is a question of the most profitable age of the hen. Poultrymen who have kept in touch with poultry investigations during the past few years are pretty well informed on this point, but the importance of this subject is not yet generally appreciated. The writer carried on for several years at the Utah experiment station a line of experiments with the object of determining the value of the hen at different ages for egg production. The same hens were kept year after year under similar conditions and a record kept of production and of food consumed. These experiments proved that the hen is different from the cow which retains or improves her productivity with age. The first year was the most profitable and there was a gradual decrease in productiveness each succeeding year. It is safe to figure this decrease at 25 per cent each year. With average prices for food and for eggs it is not profitable to keep hens after they have finished their second year of laying. The first, or pullet year is very profitable, the second will give a satisfactory profit, but during the third year the egg yield will seldom pay for the food consumed.

Those conclusions apply only of course where the eggs are sold at market prices. Fowls that have a special value as breeding stock should be kept longer, but the notion that "the old speckled hen" is the good layer should not be cherished unless she is caught in the trap nest. The fact that she sings a joyful lay, paints her comb a brilliant red and scratched a vigorous scratch should not be accepted as sufficient grounds for commencing sentence.

It is safe to say that the poultry-keepers of this state would be many thousands of dollars in the pocket by vigorously killing off the hens every two years and replacing them with new stock—with the exceptions noted above.

Where the pullets and hens are allowed to run together it will be necessary to mark them, otherwise it will be difficult to separate the old stock from the young when it is desired to market them. The usual method of marking is to punch a hole in the web between the toes when the chicks are hatched. This is easily and quickly done with a punch which may be purchased from the poultry supply houses for 25 cents. A number of different markings may be made in this way. Where the practice is to dispose of the hens every two years it will be sufficient to mark them every other year.

NOT APPLICABLE TO COTTAGE GROVE

A well-know Roseburg man met two women, stopped and conversed with them. As he did so he raised his hat in salutation and removed his cigar. When he left them his hat was again raised. In this he did as every well-bred gentleman would do. Soon afterward he met his wife on the street and stopped to talk with her, but there was no motion of the hand to hat either at meeting or parting. Everybody knows that the incident is by no means unusual. Yet is there any reason why the wife should not receive the same courteous recognition as the mere acquaintance? When a girl takes upon herself the marriage vows at the altar, is it right that she should thereby give up all claim to the little courtesies of life previously paid to her by the man she married? Why should a husband be less polite to his wife than other men are to her? Why is it that when you see a man greet a woman on the street without the usual salutation of a gentleman you invariably say whether you know them or not, "He's her husband."—News.

OVERTAXED.

Hundreds of Cottage Grove Readers Know What It Means.

The kidneys are overtaxed; Have to suffer from it; They tell about it in many aches and pains—Backache, sideache, headache. Early symptoms of kidney ills. Urinary troubles, diabetes, Bright's disease follow.

A Cottage Grove citizen tells here a certain cure.

Walter Rogers, living on the west side, Cottage Grove, Ore., says: "I suffered for sometime with pains in my back and side and disordered condition of the kidneys. I did not give the trouble serious thought, thinking it would soon disappear. It did not, however, and I rapidly grew worse. The secretions were so terribly frequent that I was forced to rise many times during the night and the passages were attended with severe pain. I tried nearly every remedy that was brought to my attention and also used liniments and plasters but did not succeed in finding any relief. I then read of Doan's Kidney Pills and was so impressed that I procured a box at Benson's Pharmacy. I received relief from the first and was so much encouraged that I procured a further supply. I used these as directed and was rewarded with a complete cure. The pains have entirely disappeared and I am able to go to bed and sleep throughout the night, something that I was unable to do before using Doan's Kidney Pills. Price 50 cents. For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.
